TO THE PUBLIC.

THE most pleasing duty we can first discharge, (and one in which we are sure our readers will sympathize,) is that of returning our best thanks to all who have honored with their patronage this publication; and we are proud to state that it has already received the support of no less than 1000 persons. Yet on ushering it into the world, (even with such recommendations) we feel all the sensations which agitate the bosoms of Mamas' on the first entrée of a favourite Miss;—yet like her our fears, are balanced by our hopes and pride:—So bidding her adieu we consign her fate to the care of that society, which is too polite not to extol her accomplishments, and too well bred to notice her imperfections.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS THEATRE opens to-night for the first time this season, and as the Bills announce, with considerable improvements and embellishments; the play (with much good taste) selected for the occasion is Hamlet.

Of this play Dr. Johnson observes, that "if the Dramas of Shakspeare, were to be characterized, each by the particular excellence which distinguishes it from the rest, we must allow to the Tragedy of Hamlet the praise of variety. The incidents are so numerous that the arguments of the play would make a long tale. The scenes are interchangeably diversified with merriment and solemnity; with merriment that includes judicious and instructive observations; and solemnity not strained by poetical violence above the natural sentiments of man. New characters appear from time to time, in continual succession, exhibiting various forms of life, and particular modes of conversation. The pretended madness of Hamlet, causes much mirth; the mournful distraction of Ophelia, fills the heart with tenderness, and every personage produces the effect intended, from the apparition that in the first act, chills the blood with horror, to the fop in the last that exposes affection to just contempt. It may be objected that of the feigned madness of Hamlet, there appears no adequate cause, for he does nothing that he might not have done with the reputation of sanity. He plays the madman most when he treats Ophelia with so much rudeness which seems to be useless and wanton cruelty. Hamlet through the whole piece is rather an instrument than an agent; after he has by the stratagem of the play convicted the king, he makes no attempt to punish him, and his death is at last affected by an incident which Hamlet had no part in producing; the catastrophe is not very happily produced, the exchange of weapons is rather an expedient of necessity than a stroke of art."

HAY-MARKET.

WE went on Saturday evening to this Theatre to witness for the first time, the new play of Match Breaking, and we confess that our expectations were much excited by the account we had heard of it;—yet though we were pleased and amused, our anticipations were far from being fully realized. The Comedy is very barren, both of incident and plot the latter common, rather inconsistent, and deficient of those novelties and dénouements which surprise, and keep on the alert the imagination of the spectator. There are two or three amusing situations produced by a coterie of politicians which excited much laughter;—but we conceive that the reputation of the play is due chiefly to the exertions of Mr. Jones (as Solomon,) whose quaint and peculiar vivacious style of acting obtained for him, the warmest approbation of the audience, and in our estimation for the piece, its proclaimed merits. The other characters were well sustained, though not strikingly so. We think Mr. Terry was deficient in a situation which might have produced effect; when in the disguise of Professor Hoffman his orders are openly and positively disobeyed by Edgar, (Mr. De Camp,) although knowing him to be his Sovereign, upon which the latter casting aside his assumed habit, and advancing with all the dignity of offended Majesty, utters these words, "Your Prince commands it;" we think Mr. T. failed here to produce that effect which the situation admits of, and consequently lost one of the few opportunities which presented themselves in this character of rendering it conspicuous.

The music in the piece is good, and a very sweet duet, ('Tis Love) between, Miss R. Corri and Mrs. Baker, was most deservedly encored. The Entertainments concluded with the Marriage of Figaro, but which being announced for repetition to-night, we shall convey our observations on it in our next.

In the course of the Opera, on Saturday, Mr. Tayleure introduced two airs on the pandean reeds, which he played with great taste, and received applause; yet we confess, we would willingly have dispensed with his performance thinking it derogatory to the Theatre; and the lovers of the Drama and of Mozart would feel little pleasure at hearing a performance on the Pandean Reeds, (or Jews Harp,) amongst music so divine, as that in the Marriage of Figaro.

We regret that the house was not so full as we expected it would have been from the deserved popularity of Mr. Jones, whose benefit it was.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE hail with delight the return of Mr. Young to this Theatre, as his sterling merits may contribute to support the tottering fabric of legitimate Drama; his genius and talents enable him to embody all the ideas and beauties of his author, and though we deem that his delineations are sometimes feeble and deficient of that expression which should strike them forcibly on the imagination of his auditor, yet there is a chasteness in his general style, which never fails of arresting the attention and feelings of all who see him.

Thus it fares with the regular and classical efforts of art, that they grow upon the taste of the spectator and acquire a higher relish at each repetition, while those caresses which are obtained by tricks and knacks of what is called knowledge of stage effect, diminish on re-examination, and fade at last into oblivion. Why Mr. Young's efforts strike with a peculiar power, and produce so brilliant an effect, is, that they are all consonant to the character, to pourtray which they are exerted; they are its natural shoots, and not grafts of a foreign and heterogeneous growth. The forces of the poet and actor concur instead of clashing, and each shines the more brightly, and steadily, by never sparkling at the others expense. This is that excellence of art at which Hamlet himself instructs the player to aim, that temperance in the whirlwind of passion which gives smoothness to the whole, that unity, which reconciles the various tints, and harmonizes them all in the general tone of the picture.

The play was announced for a repetition on Monday next amidst great applause. The House was very full, and two new private boxes have been added to the second circle.

The performances concluded with Undine. These entertainments we view with a jealous eye, and blush to believe, that a polished and enlightened public is premitting such pieces to occupy that attention, which should be bestowed on the legitimate drama.

HAY-MARKET.

THE Marriage of Figaro was performed at this Theatre last night. It is a translation from the Italian opera of the same name by Mozart, which latter was taken from a French piece by Mons. Beaumarchais: Mozart was by birth a German, born at Salzburgh in 1756, and died in 1791. The plot of this piece has long been before the public (previous to the adaption, by Mr. Bishop, of the opera to our stage) under the title of the "Follies of a Day;" and though the original suffered much in its translation, many beauties in it, being sacrificed to accord with the peculiarities of those who were to sustain the principal characters, it has nevertheless attractions enough, to render it under its present appearance delightful to those who recollect it, even in its purer state.

Mozart may really be considered as the Shakspeare of Italian theatrical musicians, and the extraordinary combination of dramatic and harmonious effects in the music, which becomes a vehicle for the conveyance of passion and character to the ear of the auditor, is but faintly pourtrayed on our Stage, when our singers accustomed but to the harmony of sounds which convey little other meaning than that of softness, wildness, and rapidity, find themselves ill calculated to embody with music, dramatic figure, passion and effect.— There appears to have been much attention bestowed upon the production of this opera at the Hay-Market; the chorusses are excellent, and Miss R. Corri sang with considerable effect; we know not how long this lady has been upon the Stage, but we think, that as a singer, and singing actress, she promises much; the middle tones of her voice are very sweet, the upper ones weak and sometimes unmelodious, though as apparently conscious of this, she seldom makes an exertion to to produce with them any great effect, but by a happy art, blends their weakness with a pleasing taste. Miss Carew sustained with propriety the character of Almaviva's Countess, and by her execution and science (we cannot say voice, for this lady's is far from being agreeable) sustained with eclat her share of the compound music, and sang with considerable effect a very fine song in the scene previous to that which concludes the piece.

The most material character (both musical and dramatic) in the piece, is Figaro. and one which requires great musical and theatrical abilities in the performer who sustains it. Its importance in the piece is manifest, for there is scarcely a striking situation in it which depends not chiefly upon him; Mr. Decamp played the part, and we never saw either a worse conception, or a more vulgar delineation of a character; instead of being (like Trappanti) the brisk, sharp, quaint, intriguing, and unlike him, we may say, polished Figaro. (for the Count would scarcely have had him continually about his person or assigned to him a distinguished post in his Embassy was he not) we should have supposed he had been educated as clown to a ring, or bully to a brothel. He sang with considerable effect his part in the finale to the first act. Mrs. Chatterley played Cherubino with much vivacity and truth.

DRURY LANE.

ERE we commence the task of criticism, we wish most strongly to impress upon our readers, that our observations are wholly uninfluenced by private feelings, which instead of promoting, would if exercised in this cause degrade and injure the public capacity we have assumed; quite unconnected either by ties or circumstances, with the individuals we have presumed to criticise, our remarks proceed only from our judgments; if they sometimes are severe, 'tis from the necessity we feel of discharging with candour the duty we owe to a high tribunal. We know not a nobler, nor to mankind a more beneficial profession than is the Stage, when reared on the foundation of its true merits; but where its efforts are directed to the cultivation of a debased and puerile taste, the man who at each corner preserves our boots from being soiled, is of society a more useful member, than he who plays the monkey for our childrens sport. We last night visited Drury-lane, we can only observe on the chief performance that the EYE was never before so dazzled; the principal actors, the Horses, performed their parts with more skill than we have seen displayed by many of their rational relations. The master Tailor merits every eulogium which can be bestowed on him, and indeed, we think he may with much modesty aspire to a pedestal, by Shakspeare's side over the portico. To the Drill Sergeant also much praise is due, and we should be guilty of real ingratitude, were we not to yield our obligations to that important and distinguished member of the Theatre, the mechanist—in a few words to the Horses, their more enlightened masters.—Tailors,—Carpenters,—Scene-painters,—Shifters Sergeants.—Property-men and Mechanists, we, as lovers of the Drama, offer in the names of all dramatic writers and actors, from Shakspeare to Sheridan, from Henderson to Garrick, our best thanks for the intellectual enjoyments they have for the last month or six weeks afforded us at the Theatre Royal, Drury-lane! We really sigh when we reflect on what the Stage may shortly become; when this great national Theatre is being converted into a School for Scene-painters, Tailors, and the training of Theatrical Horsemen. We thought while viewing this gorgeous pageant we beheld the Genius of the Stage cast her drooping eyes on the surrounding show, heave a last sigh and quit the sickening scene: well may there be a dearth of Authors—would my Lord Byron write for the Stage, to hear his praises coupled with those of Horses, Tailors and Painters but farewell to the Drama since our great national Theatres are the mere stock in trade of Theatrical speculators.

HAY-MARKET.

THE representation, last night, at this Theatre of the play of Match Breaking, confirmed us in the opinion we had previously formed of how much its success was owing to the efforts and peculiar style of Mr. Jones's acting. Mr Oxberry, last night sustained the character of Soloman, and altho' this Gentleman exerted himself to supply the deficiency occasioned by Mr. J's absence, the proportion which the part in his hands contributed to the general effect, as well as the individual feeling it excited, were far different from those produced on a previous occasion. Mr. Oxberry is a man of abilities, possessing a perfect knowledge of the stage (an information absolutely necessary for a performer in his line of the profession.) yet still his talents and peculiarities are not of that general description, which will obtain for him much more than toleration out of a certain walk; there is now and then a quaintness in his acting which is pleasing, but too often the pleasure is destroyed by a vulgarity of manner, and an overstrained effort to produce effect. His acting in the Interlude pleased us much, and in such characters as this, we think this Gentleman appears to most advantage. We feel very desirous of seeing Mr. Decamp in a part suited to him, as we do not wish to exercise our judgments too hastily. Mrs. Baker sustained in the play a male character, why this should be we know not, we cannot impute it to the poverty of the Theatre; and as to any other cause, we beg to assure the Managers, that however well this lady played the youth, such transformations contribute little to the respectability of the profession, or of the individuals. The entertainments concluded with Match Making, which we were much pleased with, and though the characters are rather inconsistent, they were well sustained, and produced a good effect. We admire Mr. Terry's Matchem, though we wish he had not introduced some jokes (a-la Munden) which ill corresponded with the former gentleman's hard style of acting.

Previous to the commencement of the performance, Mr. Baker came forward to apologize for a mistake in the bills; they announced Match Making as the first entertainment, instead of The Agreeable Surprize; but some of the performers in the latter piece conceiving that the pieces were to be represented as announced, were not in the Theatre, which occasioned a delay of nearly half an hour. Why, (rather than inconvenience the audience) did they not perform the entertainments as announced?

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Play of Pizarro was adapted by Sheridan, and as belonging to a particular school of dramatic productions, is a piece of much merit, though more fit for representation than for perusal. The characters are bold and striking—the interest is created from a very proper sentiment—the respect for virtue, exalted amidst dangers and temptations, and the language energetic and figurative, though sometimes bombastic and strained, nor possessing the depths of thought, and intricacy of reflection which characterizes works of a higher nature. Yet the plot is interwoven with variety, the characters easily assume a reality from their historical associations, and the moral tendency of the play is such, as is likely to awaken the best sentiments of the heart, and impart through the feelings of the auditor the kindling beams of enthusiastic virtue.

Mr. Young's delineation of Rolla was beautiful in the extreme, and elicited frequent bursts of applause; his address to the soldiers assembled in the temple was clear and energetic, though his explanation of the advantages their foes offered them, in freeing them from the "yoke of error, and improving their state, &c." was not delivered with that distinctness, which such a representation most required: his resolution of dying with Alonzo, should he prove irresolute, was given with gigantic truth and force; yet in this scene we must notice two conceptions which struck us as being erroneous; when Alonzo utters a fear, that Rolla is urging him to dishonour, Mr. Young started back with dignity and indignation, and questioned "if ever Rolla counseled dishonour;" we think that Rolla, though a highly romantic character, was at this moment too much absorbed in the idea of saving his friend, to feel such indignation at an observation made under such circumstances, and a mind of so fine a texture, could not feel itself entirely free from the imputation, when he afterwards appeals to heaven for pardon for his deception. We think also, that on Alonzo's quitting the cavern, his friend would have been too breathless between hope and fear to express the course of Alonzo's escape so clearly and strongly; but there were some so beautifully natural touches in Mr. Y's acting, that they rose above the very thought of criticism.

Miss Foot looked interesting in Cora, though she failed to produce that effect which the varying tendernesses of the female heart so finely delineated in the character, might have enabled her to do. The performers were in general respectable.

The Irish Widow was the Farce for the evening, which introduced as the widow Brady a young lady to this Stage. As we understand that she is rather a novice, we would express our sentiments with much caution: she has a pleasing face and figure, her speaking and singing voices are not good, though her brogue was excessively strong, she is rather vivacious but (candidly confessing ourselves no admirer of the character) we think she sometimes forgot that the widow Brady was a lady, though under assumed habits. Mr. W. Farren's delineation of the Old Beau was rich in the extreme, and obtained the warmest approbation of the audience, with whom this gentleman appears to be a great favourite, and while Comedy still boasts of such actors we will not despair of seeing our hopes realized.

The chorusses in the play were very ill conducted, and we wish Mr. Watson (who presides at the piano) would dispense with using, like a drill sergeant, such energetic motions with his arm.

HAY-MARKET.

THE Entertainments at this Theatre presented last night no variety, with the exception of the Afterpiece of Tom Thumb. Mrs. Chatterly played the first female character in Match Breaking, and we did not think that she did that justice to the part, which it might have admitted of;—probably from the tender, and we may say, rather impassioned style of acting necessary in many parts to have done so, being beyond the sphere of her abilities, the mask being more their symbol, than the bowl and dagger. In Comedy this lady without producing any strong effect, pleases much: her voice is good, her figure interesting, her manners lady-like, and her vivacity sufficient to amuse, though not delight the spectator.

Her character in the Interlude of Match Making did not afford her any great scope; yet she played her part with much vivacity. Mr. Baker sustained the character in this piece, which was before assigned to Mr. Jones, as this arose from necessity, we shall refrain from indulging in any remarks upon it. The first piece was Tom Thumb, a style of entertainment more calculated to excite the contempt of an audience, than to ridicule any a peculiar taste or weakness in the Drama. Miss Carr, as the hero did all that could be expected of a child, and Mr. Russell, as King Arthur, sung the music with good taste and effect, though for a character so broad this gentleman wants fullness of humour. Lord Grizzle, Noodle and Doodle, were made nearly as ridiculous as we ever seen them, though without the satirizing qualities which almost redeemed the nobleman in the hands of Mr. Liston.

The house was but poorly attended.

DRURY LANE.

THE Entertainments, last night, presented to the public, at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, were of the same refined and intellectual description, which they have been every evening for the last six weeks at this house; and we understand, that Mr. Elliston means to retrieve the fading character of this Theatre, and enlighten the minds of its frequenters, by representing the "grand entry of his Majesty into the metropolis of Ireland;"—by the bye, we would hint to the Managers, that at that period the Chinese Jugglers were in the city, and a very fine menagerie of wild beasts, which would add much to the classical effect of the representation, on the Drury Lane Stage, though we really feel for all the shows in this metropolis, and particularly for the Theatrical Booths at Bartholemew Fair, for their attractions, profits and privileges, must be very much encroached upon by this great Minor Theatre. No wonder it is becoming unfashionable, for what persons of refined taste or understanding would patronize a Theatre whose entertainments are fit only for children? But a truce with this, let us point out to Mr. Elliston the danger in which he is.—The Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, has ever been looked up to with respect, blended with an almost national feeling of pride, by all persons who estimate the beauties of our dramatic authors, or associate with this house, the fond remembrances of our fathers in the memories of Garrick, Ryder, &c. and of ourselves in the recollections of a Kemble, Munden, Kean, &c.

The respectability, and ultimately the support of such a Theatre can only be maintained by the rank in which it is estimated by the higher and middling classes of society;—and we ask the managers, whether it is probable, that such persons will respect or support a Theatre, which produces entertainments fit only for a minor place of amusement. These productions may prove of present attraction, but cannot be a lasting one; but will (when the novelty has ceased) expire with indilable discredit and disgrace to the establishment.—Experience should teach them that such amusements are not only more expensive than rational ones, but require an unbounded variety to support them; as in such scenes the mind has no resource, and of the splendour, the eye soon palls.—Were they to hold out liberal and secure encouragement to authors—were they to cultivate a description of entertainment, the study of which would produce good actors;—revive old plays—banish their pantomimes, 'till our children's festivals at Christmas; the Drama would again shine forth in its pristine excellence, men of family and education would not scruple at adopting a profession, which would then become respectable, and the Managers would be the gainers, by an improvement, which would render dramatic literature indebted to them for the changes.

HAY-MARKET.

THE performances last night commenced with Silvester Daggerwood, which character was sustained by Mr. Russell, some of whose imitations were good, but we think him upon the whole very inferior in the part to Mr. Yates. Match Breaking appeared to afford the audience much entertainment, though neither the repetitions nor the changes in the cast of it in the least degree altered our opinion of its merits as a theatrical production; and Mr. Oxberry appears to all the disadvantage, resulting from the first and favourable impression we conceived of Mr. Jones, in the character of Solomon. Much praise is due to the Managers for the excellent manner in which the Opera of Figaro is produced at this Theatre; the music is admirably executed, and it is but justice to Mr. Decamp (though we do not at all admire his acting the part) to again notice how much effect he gave to the finale of the first act.

Mr. Baker played the Count most respectably, though he was guilty of an inconsistency in the first act, by leading forward two of his domestics before all his servants, and while the former were singing, he tenderly bent over them, with his arm sometimes round one of their waists.

Some gentlemen in the Boxes conversed very loud during the performance, which is an indulgence highly indecorous and rude. The Boxes of this Theatre are very incommodious, and unpleasantly remind us of an observation made in the Gallery of the New Dublin Theatre by one of the Gods, who objecting to the smallness of the Gallery, said, among other inconveniencies arising from it, that if a man's friend affronted him, there was not sufficient room to knock him down.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Beau Stratagem was last night performed at this Theatre; this Comedy is from the pen of Farquahar, the incidents in it are various, the characters well drawn, and the dialogue lively and sometimes highly poetical; though abounding in gross expressions and ideas, which, on reference to plays of this, and of an earlier date, seem to be the style generally adopted by authors, and consequently relished by audiences of those periods; yet no longer in our days permitted to offend the ears of modesty, or transgress the limits of propriety. Many parts of Mrs. Sullen's character are highly dangerous and indelicate, though expunged with very proper feeling on last night's representation, and left a convincing proof that banishing from the piece such compliances with depraved tastes does not in the least degree detract from the play's beauty, humour, or excellence.

The moral of this play is far from being good, as the leading characters are nothing more than gentlemen adventurers, who would, in the present unromantic period come nearly within the meaning of the Swindling Act.

Mr. Meadows of the Bath Theatre made his first appearance last night at this Theatre, in the character of Scrub. This gentleman seems perfectly acquainted with the business of the part, which forms a very essential portion of the character, and in this without having recourse to grimace or buffoonery he very happily succeeded; his acting was fair and correct, but without point or expression, and he judiciously chose a character which, theatrically speaking, almost acts itself: he produced a very good effect in the scene where he is alarmed by thieves, and upon the whole, without considering his performance as great, we feel much inclined to deem it highly respectable.

Mr. Jones played the character of Archer, though we do not think it is this gentleman's happiest effort, and he failed to mark the distinction between the gentleman when resumed, and the servant when assumed:

Mr. Abbot was respectable (and no more) in the character of Aimwell.

Mr. Emery played Gibbett with his usual strength and just conception of character: but we must fain remark even upon this, that Gibbett was too experienced, to betray such agitation and anxiety at Aimwell's (mere tho' pertinent) enquiries which he must have expected from a stranger, as Aimwell must either have been blind to Gibbett's character, or he be a mere novice in his profession.

Mrs. Davison, played the character of Mrs. Sullen, with much judiciousness. The rest of the characters were respectable: the House was well attended, and the entertainments afforded much amusement. The struggles between the heroes and the the thieves, were managed more in a Theatrical—than in a natural manner, for the parties seemed very unwilling to come to a close combat, 'till the audience stimulated their valour by a few hisses.

HAY-MARKET.

THE Opera of Fontainbleu was performed last night, and does not diminish the reputation this Theatre has obtained, for the excellence of its musical productions. The piece, independent of the music is highly entertaining, and rather an able satire upon the characteristic follies of ourselves, and of our French neighbours. The characters are rather outré, but lively and entertaining; though we could almost apply the same observation to the shirtless hero of this piece, that we have done to the honorable ones of the former play, that it is well for both of them that the same act was not during their adventures in existence, as otherwise they might most unheroically have concluded their career in the Cold Bath Fields prison.

Mr. Leoni Lee sang with much good taste.

Mr. De Camp played Colonel Epaulette, in a very finished manner; we are happy to yield our praise to this gentleman, by saying, that we never saw the character better acted.

Mr. Oxberry's Tallyho, was nothing like the sporting, blunt, English Squire but in appearance.

The House was not very well attended.

"Gerald Duval—The Coronation, and Monsieur Tonson." "Soup for breakfast, soup for dinner, and SOUP FOR SUPPER;"—but as this soup maigre has been made palatable to the unrefined stomachs of the managers, the lovers of more intellectual dishes have but two resources left—the accommodation of their appetites to the former fare, or the necessity of indulging in neither; a hard resource for those who wish to live. But in thus directing our observations so pointedly against the entertainments of this Theatre, we assure our readers and the Managers, that we are influenced by no party feelings, nor by a single motive unconnected with that which we in our Prospectus stated would regulate this Work—the desire of seeing the Drama in its undefiled and proper state, how far this Theatre has advanced it, our readers themselves can judge:—not that we expect Managers would become Patriots, and sacrifice their present gains to the support of their profession (though we are convinced the change would ultimately prove to them most beneficial) but that we are roused when we behold one of the two principal Theatres not satisfied with degrading itself for six weeks, promises a repetition of such spectacles and buffoonery, with which the town must now be surfeited, and will encouragingly embrace the prospect of again returning to its more rational amusements. We complain of the deficiency on our London boards of leading characters, (female ones particularly) but what actress will devote her study to the higher walks, when her employments are in the lower ones? This perverted taste Aristophanes loudly complains of, and this perverted taste ultimately destroyed the Athenian Theatre and its effects. Let us endeavour to analyse this species of entertainment, which now is sanctioned by the public, and defiles our boards:—In language—bombast—and nonsense—in acting—fierce looks, starts, dreadful oaths, grinding of teeth, rolling of eyes, roaring like thunder,—then suddenly making a transition to a plaintive or an unintelligible strain. An interesting young man, looking pathetic,—a captiviting female uttering shrieks—a murderer roaring for vengeance, and, at the moment of gratification, receiving a death wound. A band of robbers, consigned in the end to the fostering care of the hangman—a coward and a fool uttering bad jokes, an abandoned mistress entering the penitentiary. A discharge of pistols—clash of swords,—an explosion of a cavern—a group of the amiable parties,—an huzza by the supernumeraries, and (thank Heaven!)—a conclusion to the piece. Yet these are the Entertainments permitted by a refined and intellectual British audience, to-night after night, sully the boards of our great Theatres. Shame! shame! we could not behold Mr. Elliston walk through the Pit in the Coronation, (remembering him as we do,) without feeling the sensation excited by the recollection of a fading, though a pleasing dream.

The House was well attended.

HAY-MARKET.

Notwithstanding the repetition at this Theatre, of the Opera of the Marriage of Figaro, we witnessed it again on Saturday night with much pleasure, and such is the feeling, which pieces of intrinsic merit like this, on the first performance create, that each following representation strikes out new beauties to the auditors, which enhance the value of the first impression; we must notice how much we were pleased with Mrs. Garrick's performances of the trifling character of Barbarina, she played it with very just conception and spirit, proving how conspicuous (and yet not improperly so) an inferior part may be rendered, when acted with propriety and feeling. Mrs. G's. singing voice is very disagreeable, being harsh and нУСКУ, but her science is rather of a superior cultivation, and in a certain line of characters this lady sufficiently combines the requisites of a singer and actress.

We wish the Managers would call upon the exertions of the Scene-painters, for really we never saw greater daubs than some of the Scenes are, we do not think the painting them would give much trouble, as most of them are already well primed. The pieces went off well, and we were happy to observe, that the well selected Entertainments drew a good and fashionable House.

MR. YOUNG appeared last night for the second time this season in the character of Hamlet, the first representation of which excited general admiration, nor did we think the repetition of it in the least degree abated the sensation created by its first performance. We do not consider Mr. Young's Hamlet either as his chef d'ouvreur, or as a perfect piece of acting, tho' there are many parts of it, the beauty and correctness of which, strike home upon the heart of every auditor: and in some of the soliloquies where the mind is delineating the passions and reasoning on the workings of the soul, our thoughts became absorbed, our feelings mingled and flowed in unison and harmony with the character,—insensible to every thing that Hamlet felt not. But still Mr. Young has physical prohibitions which deprive him of the power of producing certain effects, and there is too often a chilly atmosphere about him, which is not always dispelled in accordance with the transitions and succession of feelings which constitute the character of Hamlet. Upon the whole we consider Mr. Young's delineation of this character as inferior to Mr. C. Kemble's, though many parts of it are master-pieces of the scenic art.

Miss Foote played Ophelia, but we felt not those thrilling sentiments of tenderness and pity for the ill-fated girl whom reason has deserted; nor, while sorrow sat upon our brow, did the unbidden tear of sympathy unconsciously bedew our cheeks, or ease the heart which over wrought nature swelled; yet the plaintive ditties and appeals to nature of this interesting girl should have roused our feelings thus.

Mr. Abbott played Laertes, and displayed in it an extraordinary PECULIARITY of talent,—that of preserving his features and his muscles in a perfect state of calm repose, whilst his voice thundered within, like the hoarse pumpings of Mount Etna's crater.

Mr. Blanchard performed Polonius with much truth.

Mrs. Faucit endeavoured to assume a very distinguished air of majesty in the Queen, tho' the more essential part—the acting, seemed, in comparison, a very minor consideration.

The Entertainments concluded with "Undine," which is another of those nonsensical pieces, which we would advise Mr. Harris, (who seems inclined to restore acting to what it should be) to rid his Theatre of as soon as possible.

The House was tolerably well attended. The Galleries were disagreeably noisy.

HAY-MARKET.

COLMAN, the Younger's, Play of the Mountaineers, was last night performed at this Theatre, the character of Octavian was acted by Mr. Conway, and though it is a part, which admits of great scope for the abilities of the performer, we despair of ever seeing a representative of it, who will again convey to us the ideas of the character, like John Kemble. We were much pleased with Mr. Conway's delineation of the wild hero, in his first scene particularly, though in the succeeding one with Roque and Floranthe, his efforts were very feeble; his feelings on hearing of her death, and immediately after beholding her, appeared more like those of a philosopher, than a man whose passions had been permitted to run wild.

Mr. Ward played Kilmallock; this gentleman certainly has "a small taste" of the brogue, which he seemed to consider as the only thing requisite in the character, for he walked through it, apparently unconscious that the author intended it to stand at all conspicuous.

Mr. De Camp, played Sadi tolerably well, we should admire this gentleman much more than we do, could he divest himself of some peculiarities which he on all occasions appears to be extremely fond of. When he wishes to be interesting, he sputters through his teeth, and when jocose, he giggles like a magpie.

Mrs. Chatterley played Floranthe, in a very interesting manner, though for a person so extremely exhausted on her first arrival at the inn, she displayed fewer symptoms of it, on the departure of the host, than was consistent with the character.

The House was not well attended.

At the conclusion of the second Act, when the House was particularly silent, a gentleman in the Pit, recognising a friend in the Gallery, vociferated sans ceremonie, and with the lungs of a stentor "John!" to which the other replied in tones as soothing, "hollo!" This convulsed the audience with laughter.

DRURY LANE.

MORE SOUP last night!—Melodrame, Spectacle, and Farce! During the Summer season this House of Entertainment has given us a smoking feast: and now that Winter approaches, mine host imagines the same dishes will answer to attract guests. But let us inform mine host, that although we do not relish a cold collation when October warns us of the approach of December, yet we would rather sit down even to one of DIBDIN's lean joints, served up by HARLEY, MUNDEN, &c. &c., than have placed before us an eternal turreen of monstrosity, glitter, and balberdash.

It might have been supposed that with the season of minor theatres, Drury would have concluded its juvenile amusements; and then have gladly commenced a rational series of representations, appealing to the taste and judgment of the town for patronage: but it appears the managers here are inclined to rest their fame—hem!—profits we should say, on their powers of attracting the great and little babies. We are not inclined to partiality—we wish to see our national Theatres rivalling each other in the character of their performances; but we must say that Covent Garden has taken the lead, in representing Dramas calculated to give solid pleasure, and lasting impressions of all that is valuable in the scenic art. “Stop—stop”—Mr. Elliston, may exclaim—“have I not announced a new Comedy, and that Miss KELLY and Mr. HARLEY are about to appear?” We are happy, certainly, to hear it; but why did you not, Sir, grace the boards, the classic boards of Drury, with one piece of eminence in our dramatic literature, on the first night of a season that should be devoted to elevating the character of the British Stage? Light and shewy pieces may be tolerated after the mind has done feasting on the wit of the Comic, or the sublimities of the Tragic Poet; but to devote night after night to common place romance, dumb-shew, and bustling nonsense, is more than can be endured by persons who have forgot their nursery amusements. There cannot be a doubt of [the gross impolicy of thus satiating the public with a species of Entertainment, that exhausts all love and reverence for the haunts of Thalia and Melpomene.

The treasury of the Theatre may benefit for a time, but will eventually suffer from the extension of a well-found disgust at the utter want of intellectual attraction. The price of a seat in the Theatre is, in these times, considered as no light sum, and before it is paid, the merits of the evening's bill of fare is well canvassed. Public criticism and private report are referred to, and operate powerfully on the decision. Will it, then, be said that a Theatre can maintain its interests by an utter neglect of all that can satisfy cultivated taste, or common understanding?—certainly not. Opinion will follow the rules of plain sense, modified as they must be, and the result will exhibit empty benches to that House which neglects to allure John Bull with solid Entertainment.

HAY-MARKET.

THE Comedy of the Jealous Wife was last night performed at this Theatre, and upon the whole, we never saw a play so ill acted:—it is a piece possessing much merit, and has long existed as a favorite entertainment; the characters are natural, and well drawn, and form by their contrasts an agreeable combination of individuals influenced by opposite habits, ideas, and occupations.

Mr. Conway has not bestowed that study on the character of Mr. Oakley which it admits of; and this we felt with regret, for there were some few touches which were given with great judgment and effect: but we know not in its line a more difficult part than Oakley, or one that requires more skill and nicety in the actor to faithfully delineate the varying shades of which it is composed.

Mrs. Oakley was performed by Mrs. Johnson, who was wholly deficient of that passion and rage, which so marks and sullies the character, and was, (we must really ask her pardon) so very vulgar in her action, that it destroyed every sentiment of tribute, we might feel inclined to pay to some few parts of her acting; but Mrs. Oakley is a character requiring no common abilities; should (though we do not deem it at all likely) this piece be repeated, a greater attention to the words of the part, would not be unnecessary.

Mr. De Camp played Lord Trinket, and very justly incurred the repeated censure of the audience; for besides being very imperfect, we should really have fancied that it was Lord Trinket's French footman whom we saw, instead of the polished, the dissipated, and eccentric nobleman.

Mr. Oxberry, who is the same thing in every thing, grimaced as much as usual in Sir Harry Beagle.

Mr. Williams played Russet most respectably; and Mr. Terry with much propriety the Mayor.

The piece did not conclude with any unanimous approbation—the House was tolerably well attended.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Opera of Rob Roy was last night selected for the principal entertainment at this Theatre. The popular novel from which this piece is taken has not been ill dramatised by Mr. Pocock; yet it but faintly conveys the beauties of the former. Many of the characters being divested of their original strength to correspond with dramatic unity and effect: Diana Vernon which in the novel stands so very conspicuous, is in the play a mere singing Miss; but still as a theatrical entertainment it communicates much interest, though the beauties of the leading characters are almost too much grounded on locality to be conveyed with truth by an actor, or appreciated by the majority of an audience.

The hero, Rob Roy, was performed by Mr. Yates, though this gentleman is very incompetent to the task of portraying the character of this extraordinary man; and as the varying features in it are boldly stamped by the author, we viewed with some degree of pain the want of conception or study in the delineation. The dauntless, plain, and wild dispositions of Rob are beautifully contrasted with the keen and sensitive feeling of the "outlawed descendant of a long and noble line of martial ancestry;" and his feeling and energetic reply to Rashleigh, who reminds him of what he is, displays, under the garb of roughness, the most refined feelings of the heart; the unchangeable remains of what he was. We have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Yates failed to convey to us the real character of Rob Roy.

Mr. Lis'on played Nichol Jarvie, and, without being at all like the "Salt Market Baillie," made us laugh by the sawney ridiculous faces he pulled; though we wish this gentleman would refrain from indulging in such buffoonery during so sweet and plaintive an air as "Auld Lang Sync," and though his grimaces may amuse his brother performers, we assure him that the musical part of the audience would much rather hear that beautiful Scotch air than witness his fooleries.

Mr. Emery was in Dougal what this gentleman generally is—a master of his art.

Miss Holland was much applauded.

The entertainments went off well, though the house was not quite so well attended as we could wish.

HAY-MARKET.

WE went last night to this Theatre with our musical faculties about us in the expectation of seeing The Marriage of Figaro; but ere we had taken our seat, the discordant sounds of an apologist struck our ears, and the very strings of our heart almost broke with the touch of disappointment that swept across them, as we learnt that some envious breeze had attacked the vocal fibres of the divine Miss Corri's throat, and rendered her tuneless for the night. Grieved at the intelligence, we had half risen to withdraw, when we heard the announcement of The Green Man as a substitute for the proposed Opera. There is something in this Comedy, which might justify our re-seating ourselves, and accordingly we made up our minds to witness the performance, and be as harmonic as we could in the absence of the vocalists.

Mr. Terry, made this play successful at its outset, by his excellent performance of the eccentric Green Man; and we found that his acting on this occasion, could save it from any displeasure, even amidst the indifferent representatives of some of the other characters, in the new cast of the evening.

—Oh! Mr. Jones, how we wished for your presence, and oh, Mr. De Camp, how we groaned for your absence. We will not swell the list of names who fell under our regret; but the Major Dumpling we once admired, is buried in poor Tokely's grave.

The House was but rather thinly attended, no doubt from the change of performance.

DRURY LANE.

OUR constant readers who have perceived the unvaried representations at this Theatre, will wonder what on earth we have got to say now about it. The subject is worn out; utterly torn to tatters—it may, therefore, be supposed that under the title of Drury-lane, we do not intend to play Monsieur Tonson, and come again and again to the old house, but are going to give an account of some of those little bustling real-life dramas, that are occasionally brought out in the Lane itself—that we mean to describe the plot, characters, and incidents of a desperate row; to comment on the wit, verbal and practical of day-labourers, oyster-wenches, and old apple-women; to relate the humours of gin-drinking and head-breaking; and criticise the vocal and instrumental performers at the side of the gutter, who have wind enough to bawl or blow themselves into the favouring notice of old and young ragamuffins, that for a time forget their concerns at the chandler's shop, or the liquor-shop, and listen in dull delight to the deafening ditty, or squeeking pan-pipe.

Really such an occupation might have proved as amusing to our readers, and as beneficial to the cause of the British Drama, as repeating our observations on the proceedings of Geraldi Dural, the mock George the Fourth, and Monsieur Tonson. We might in fact have laid before the public much novelty in dramatic materiel, and given as many hints to Mr. KENNY, Mr. MONCRIEF, &c. &c. as would have enabled them to forego the necessity of pillaging French dramas, in their manufacture of English ones. A most important circumstance to patriotic play-goers, who would then be able exultingly to exclaim at a new comedy, or a new afterpiece.—“ Here's the right stuff at last, all home-made—bravo! One can grin now without complimenting French monkies—keep it up!—Bull ever.”

We do not know whether the forthcoming new Comedy at Drury-lane Theatre, is to be tried by its English merits; but if it has French ones, we should not on that account be disposed to quarrel with the piece, provided it harmonises generally with our feelings. Any thing, for heaven's sake! Mr. Elliston, but Geraldi Dural, the Coronation, and Monsieur Tonson, dose after dose.

HAY-MARKET.

THE Opera of Guy Mannering was last night produced at this Theatre; and in such a manner as reflected much credit upon the management, and confirmed the opinion we had entertained and expressed of the operatic abilities of the company. The play is the production of Mr. TERRY, the Stage Manager of this Theatre; the music, principally the composition of Mr. Bishop; and the well drawn characters and striking situations of the former, aided by the sweetness and expression of the latter, render this piece one of the most interesting of its style now upon the stage. Yet, unfortunately, we have imbibed such ideas from the original work, the novel, of one of the principal characters, Dominie Sampson, that we fear the peculiarities of this individual will never be faithfully represented; for though we have witnessed many able attempts at its delineation, no actor has yet realised the offspring of our fancy, created by the description in the novel. It may not, therefore, detract much from Mr. Tayleure's abilities to say that we did not admire his acting this part: he conveyed more the idea of an every-day-to-be-met-with character, than the pedantic, abstracted, though feeling Dominie Sampson.

Mr. Russell played Dandie Dinmont with much force and truth.

Mr. Leoni Lee sang with much effect. This gentleman has a strong voice and a good taste; though we think, that the former is sometimes deficient of sweetness, and the latter of cultivation.

Mr. Baker was highly respectable in Col. Mannering.

Miss Carew performed Lucy Bertram, and did great justice to the music, as well as to the part; her verse in the finale to the piece was sung with considerable taste.

We did not admire Mrs. Johnson's Meg Merrilies; it wanted that wildness, yet solemnity of expression which characterizes this part.

Upon the whole we were highly gratified; which sentiment was universal. The opening glee was sung with great sweetness. We did not think that the delightful overture to the piece was done perfect justice to, as in some of the particular airs, the leading instruments were behind nearly half a bar, though the leader in a particular part displayed great individual execution.

A person was removed from the pit for being noisy.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE do not know when we have been so highly gratified as we were last night at witnessing the play of the Stranger, at this House. It was indeed a treat which confers much credit on the Theatre and on the performers: and while the Managers of this establishment thus consult the real gratification of an audience, we heartily wish them that success and patronage, which we are confident the enlightened portion of the community will most liberally bestow on their endeavours. A Young Lady made her first appearance (as the bills announced) at this Theatre, in the character of Mrs. Haller, and from the abilities which she evinced in the delineation of the part, we congratulate her upon the distinguished part she is likely to fill, and the Theatre on the acquisition of such (and so much wanted) an actress; her figure and countenance are pleasing, her voice agreeable, though not possessed of many striking peculiarities, her conception is natural and vivid, her delineation strong and expressive; and some points in the concluding scene of the play were given with great effect and beauty; though we think that on the first interview with the Baron, it would have been consistent, as well as have marked the contrasts better, had she been more the Mrs. Haller, and less the wife of Steinfort; her feelings on that occasion are assumed, 'tis true, but delicacy and propriety would have banished from her manners that mysterious air in the presence of a stranger, and the brother of her protectress; but upon the whole it was an excellent piece of acting, and she deservedly received the warmest applause of the audience.

Mr. Young was excellent in Steinfort; in his description of his wrongs particularly. Mr Meadows pleased us excessively; without any factitious aids, his acting was comic and excellent. Mr. Emery and Mrs. Gibbs, were chaste and effective. The House was CROWDED; the delight most general; and when Mr. Egerton came forward to announce the pieces, a repetition of the play was loudly and warmly called for, and assigned for Friday next.

Blue Beard went off well—we wish Mr. Farley would issue his mandates to the "boys" in a lower key, as his vociferations almost broke the drums of our ears.

HAY-MARKET.

THE amusing Comedy of The Heir at Law, was performed at this Theatre last night. It is a piece of a description exactly suited to the Stage it appeared on. The wit is small; and the humour of a description that is palpable and homely. There is nothing misty in it; nothing on an extended or elevated scale, to require the idea of space, or the effect of perspective:—we are, in fact, at home with the characters, and they cannot be too near us for a full enjoyment of all they say and do.

This drama is not one of regular Comedy, but is much imbued with the qualities of Farce. Daniel Dowlas, his spouse, and Doctor Pangloss, belong to the latter species: yet the whole is blended in a way to create some touches of feeling and nature, whilst we are made merry sometimes at the expense of common sense, and occasionally at the cost of the world, that is handled with ludicrous sarcasm in some of its leading personations.

Mr. TERRY, enacted the learned Doctor Pangloss; and although it is by no means a part well adapted to his peculiar style of acting, yet he made more of the Doctor than we could have expected. In the dry rubs at his ignorant patron, he was very happy; and corrected his lordship's grammar with a most humorous causticity. Mr. FAWCETT or Mr. HARLEY, may give more celerity to the manner and diction of the cunning pedant, but we do not think they equal Mr. TERRY in pointing the sly hits.

Daniel Dowlas (alias Lord Duberby) is certainly a vulgar ci-devant old tallow-chandler, but the effect on the Stage requires a little more affectation of the airs and graces of high life, than Mr. Williams exhibited.

Mr. Lacy's Dick Dowlas was tolerable.

Zekiel met an able supporter in Mr. J. Russell, but he does not equal Mr. Knight.

Mrs. Pearce's Deborah Dowlas was good.

Match-Making, and A Roland for an Oliver, followed, and went off pleasantly.

The House, we are happy to say, was well attended.

DRURY LANE.

THE Comedy of the Dramatist was acted here on Saturday night to a numerous audience. This play, written by Mr. REYNOLDS, is wretchedly deficient in wit; and it has no great portion of humour. Its chief attraction lies in the situations of the characters, arising from Vapid's (the Dramatist) eternal pursuit of incident.

Mr. ELLISTON has long distinguished the part of the play-struck hero by the vivacity of his personation; but we think his day is gone by to give full effect to the amusing capabilities the character presents. There is a touch of time on Mr. Elliston's countenance, (he really must pardon us—we know youth won't last for ever) a touch that obliterates many of the indescribable powers of the human face divine—raising one muscle, and concealing another; deepening the lines which the efforts of expression hath imprinted; and producing a combined display, often at variance with the impulse of the mind. Thus, when Mr. Elliston endeavours to represent certain feelings of contempt, chagrin, or surprise, his wide opened eyes glare with a dim lustre—his mouth spreads, and his jowl enlarges, until his physiognomy somewhat resembles that of a mastiff. But this worthy gentleman, and once admirable performer, still bears matured youth in his air and figure; and if it were not for the grey-haired thief, who has stolen some of his laurels, and a certain growing fault in his delivery, which is often in labour and brings forth nothing but disgust, we think we might truly say he was every thing to be wished for in this character. In our opinion he would act most wisely by giving up the part for the future to Mr. HARLEY, who as Ennui, has little to do, and nothing equal to his talents. By the bye, on the latter gentleman coming on in this wise-acre character for the first time this season (as it is facetiously called) he was no more taken notice of by the audience than if he had been a stage-sweeper. Why this neglect of a long-standing favourite? We imagine it may be accounted for from the audience being chiefly composed of those who are seldom visitors of the theatres; and, therefore, are not well acquainted with the persons, or impressed with the merits of the performers. Indeed, it is to this class Mr. Elliston is indebted for the long run of his Coronation. The numerous families at present out of town, have set at liberty shoals of cooks and chambermaids, who, dear creatures, "loves to see fine sights."

The agreeable Mrs. EDWIN, who played Marianne, and who also made a "first appearance this season," was not distinguished by the enlightened audience on her entré, any more than if she had been an old apple woman.

Miss SMITHSON represented Louisa Courtney. We feel great pleasure in being able to commend this amiable young lady. She improves on us: but she must give a little more distinctness and natural tone to her delivery.

Mr. GATTIE as Lord (alias old) Scratch made us feel a little awkward. His shrugs, twists, agitations, wig-twitchings, stick-thumpings, and entire corporeal demeanor, communicated to us the sensations of one who can't tell what the deuce to be at. He was dressed like a Greenwich pensioner, with a star-fish tied to his button.

Mr. RUSSELL, was very sufficient as Floriville, yet with all his admiration of Italy, we much doubt whether he could justify the habit he appeared to have brought hence, of taking snuff with his glove on.

The other characters were filled up, that is all we can say of them.

HAY-MARKET.

On the last announcement of the Marriage of Figaro at this Theatre, we expressed the disappointment we experienced from its unavoidable postponement, owing to the illness of Miss R. Corri, whose talents enable her to sustain with so much ability the character of Susanna: but we on Saturday evening resumed our "musical faculties," and prepared to receive atonement for the jarring disappointment they had on a former occasion sustained; nor were our expectations unrealized, for the frequent repetitions of this Opera, have not abated any of the exertions of the performers, so effectually made on its early representations.

Miss R. Corri with her health, has resumed the beauties of her vocal possessions, and displayed them with much effect on Saturday. This lady's family are distinguished in the musical world. Her grandfather, the late Dominico Corri, was a native of Italy, and at an early period of his life, excited attention, and obtained the protection of a celebrated Cardinal by his vocal abilities; her father, the present proprietor of the Pantheon in Edinburgh, is much noticed for his professional knowledge, and dedicated his talents some few years since to the cultivation of musical pupils. Mr. Duruset, now rather a distinguished member of Covent Garden, was under his care. There is also another member of the family, a sister, who as a concert singer, has long enjoyed the applause and approbation of the public, nor do the talents of Miss R. Corri in the least degree lessen the musical fame this family has so long possessed.—The House was well attended.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Tragedy of Hamlet was last night performed for the third time this season, and we felt most happy to observe that at an early part of the play the house was excessively crowded. The Manager of Covent Garden, has very properly blended his interest with the respectability of the profession over which he so considerably presides, and has wisely commenced his season with a series of performances befitting the abilities of his performers, and the enjoyments of a rational public: and though the entertainments are still a little impregnated with the corruptions of the last campaign, we trust that the support which he is now receiving will induce him to exalt the character of Covent Garden Theatre to the highest pitch of Theatrical celebrity, by rendering it the vehicle of intellectual and refined amusement only, or at least, by confining the entertainments of an inferior description to a period of the season, most suited to them, when children return from school and grown babies receive their Christmas boxes. Many revivals of farce entertainments might be effected, in which the shaft of satire, sent from the bow of humour, is levelled against the follies of society, nor, perhaps with some few deficiencies, were the talents of a company more generally respectable and great, as votaries both of the Tragic and the Comic Muse, than in Covent Garden at present.

On Mr. Young's Hamlet we have before remarked,—he was much applauded.

Mr. Blanchard's Polonius was highly respectable; his advice to his daughter on the subject of Lord Hamlet was impressive and natural.

Mr. Chapman played the character of Claudius, and if this Gentleman was tried for compassing the death of that monarch, we fear that nothing could save him from the gallows.

Mr. Farley's Osrick was, though without point, a respectable piece of acting. The play went off well.

By the bye, we have to offer an apology for several typographical errors in some of the numbers of yesterday, and particularly to Mr. GATTIE—the star-fish was not tied to his "bottom," but to his button.

HAY-MARKET.

IN our ninth number we made some remarks on the Comedy of The Jealous Wife, as acted at this Theatre. We there stated, that the approbation was by no means unanimous on the merits of the performance, and hinted at the probability of its not being repeated. In this expectation we were wrong. It was again presented last night, without any alteration in the cast of characters. It was evident that the performers had bestowed more study on their several parts; and, therefore, in some instances they received some unalloyed applause; but on the whole, we again declare, that the impression was against the representation. The company at this Theatre do not altogether harmonise in point of figure or talents; and the judgment of the manager is not always correct in classing the performers. Thus, last night, the intended effect of the play was often lost in the risibility occasioned by the broad farce-view the actors on the Stage presented.

When Mr. Conway brought down the two chairs for his wife (Mrs. Oakley) and himself; he really reminded us of the French Hercules, who at Covent Garden last season exhibited amongst other feats, that of carrying two men about the Stage: and in the scene where Mrs. Oakley discovers her husband with Miss Harriet, and they are subsequently broke in upon by old Russet, the group was the most ludicrous that ever, perhaps, was exhibited. Mr. Conway's gigantic form every one knows. Mrs. Johnson is of tolerable height; but Mrs. Young (who was Harriet) is uncommonly tall and thin; whilst her papa Russet was enacted by Mr. Williams, in a powdered bob-wig, whose stature is greatly below that of his fair daughter. The contrasts these figures afforded to the eye, were the cause of loud and long continued merriment.

Great actors in every Theatre are desirable; but, really, we would rather see Mr. Conway mounted at the Horse-guards, than stalking on the boards of the little Theatre in the Hay-market. And if Gulliver's kind nurse Glumdalclitch, should ever become a person of the drama, we would recommend Mrs. Young to the part.

The House was moderately attended.

DRURY LANE.

THIS Theatre overflowed last night. What did the great concourse of people come to see? Not surely Gerardi Duval, an indifferent Melo-drama, full of stale incidents, and hack-nied Scenes. Nor Monsieur Tonson, a very so-so Farce. No—they came to see The Coronation; which, certainly is as glittering a shew, and as interesting an exhibition of a great national ceremony as many of us are likely ever to see. We would rejoice at the success of this Theatre, so lately depressed by the utter neglect of the public, had we been able to trace it in some degree to a cause connected with any valuable portion of the drama. Not that we object to the Spectacle of the Coronation, but to the want of something in the evening's amusements, worthy of that Stage on which genius has so often been triumphant. It might have been supposed that a Manager, who had at heart the permanent welfare of the establishment he presides over, would not, at a moment when he was enabled to command a full house by the temporary interest of a splendid pageant, have neglected to maintain his reputation for taste and judgment, by a display of dramas calculated to satisfy an intellectual audience. To be sure, the Manager of Drury may assert, from recent experience, that audiences of that description do not just now honor him with their presence. This we agree to, and our observations last night confirm us in the opinion we gave of the class of persons who at this time are the chief supporters of his Theatre. We remarked in one of the Stage boxes, two butlers and three ladies-maids, or at least two men and three women in a costume bespeaking such to be their vocations—the other boxes were lined with little misses and young masters, with papas and mamas yawning behind them—the Pit and Galleries were one mass of bonnets, and it would be strange indeed if, when female curiosity to see the sight is roused, it did not draw some gallants to Philander the ladies. All this does well for the Treasury—the sovereigns are counted, and Mr. Elliston smiles. Let us hope some of those smiles and a due proportion of those sovereigns await the encouragement of genuine dramatic talent; that authors who merit favour and reward will not be treated with dubious civility, and a payment beneath the acceptance of a gentleman. Then we will look back on Mr. Elliston's Coronation as history may on that of George the Fourth, and bless the loyalty of our managers, as we do the wisdom of our forefathers in ordaining so much money to be spent to create a bounteous hand that will scatter more.

We observed that Mr. Pope, who was supposed to personate the Marquess of Londonderry, or the Duke of York, or somebody, in the Coronation Procession, took particular pains to distinguish himself by turning full round to the audience, and not following his nose (as the vulgar saying is), as the other persons of the pageant did. Now we should like to know Mr. Pope's reason for thus distinguishing himself. If he meant it as a compliment to the noble Marquess, or Duke, or Lord-Knows-who, to make him more prominent in the spectacle than any other noble person, it was the greatest blunder he ever committed out of Ireland. A character for modest propriety is generally thought desirable; but, perhaps, Mr. Pope thinks otherwise. Or if he does not, then the noble personage he represented, is Mr. Pope's most humble servant and truly obliged.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Opera of the Antiquary was last night performed at this Theatre; of its merit as a theatrical entertainment we can say but little. The characters in it, though striking and peculiar, do not well harmonize with dramatic effect, and possess those points and features which are more easy to be conceived on a perusal of the novel, than delineated in the narrow compass of an act or play; not that we think that justice has been done to the original in its adaptation to the stage which it merited; but the limits of the scene must have much contracted the power of faithfully portraying characters, the strength and beauty of which are not developed by the reasonings of the mind and workings of the soul, but by the peculiarity of the moulds in which they are cast, and the singularity of the situations in which they are placed. Upon the whole, the adaptations of these novels to the stage, have not, we think, increased or elucidated the beauties of the former, and certainly produced no very beneficial service to the latter.

Mr. Liston as Jonathan Oldbuck, entirely failed in realizing the character our imaginations had formed; the buffoonery in which this gentleman so much indulges, and which seems so peculiarly his forte, but ill corresponded with the hard, dry, and eccentric Antiquarian. Mr. Liston as a broad Farce actor—or in less dramatic terms, in an outrage of nature and of reason, is very excellent, but when conception of character is requisite, when the intellectual powers of the actor are called into play, this gentleman is worse than nothing, for he is what the author never intended he should be.

Mr. Emery as Edie Ochiltree, was inimitable. This gentleman is sometimes put into characters unsuited to him, but he has real and sterling merits; which will sink deep into the records of histrionic art, while the superficial and spurious talents of many of his brethren, will be obliterated from those annals, "and leave not a wreck behind."

Mr. Duruset played Lovel most respectably.

Miss Hallande sang with much effect the music of Miss Wardour; this lady we shall more particularly notice on a future occasion.

The rest of the characters were respectably sustained.

The House was very well attended.

As to Blue Beard we remember Suet in Ibrahim. Selim—Mr. Kelly. Shacabac—Mr. Bannister. Fatima—Mrs. Crouch. Irene—Miss De Camp, now Mrs. C. Kemble, and Beda—Mrs. Bland; and that is quite enough for us.

HAY-MARKET.

THANKS to Sir Walter Scott, or some other manufacturer of the Scotch novels, as they are called, this Theatre had last night, as well as Covent Garden, the benefit of the materials he has furnished for dramatists. Rob Roy Macgregor, was the performance here, and the novelties of the evening were the first appearance of Mr. TERRY as Rob, and Miss CAREW as Diana Vernon.

Mr. Terry's assumption of the part of the warlike highlander, was almost as judicious an undertaking as it would have been for little Mr. Williams to have attempted it. Indeed we think the latter gentleman was the best qualified of the two for Rob's peculiarities. He would not at least, have been sententious, and solemnly bold, but have given us a rapid, smirking, glossy touch of courage, that might certainly have proved equally a deviation from Rob's character; yet, we should have had something to be amused with, and regret at the murder of the part, consequently have been much softened.

It is painful to see a gentleman who ought by this time to know his histrionic path, strike out of the high road into a track where he must suffer from natural obstacles. Mr. Terry delights in every character that is susceptible of the expression of dry humour, steady judgment, and formal feeling—but when he tries to elicit fire from his iron visage, we are absolute flints that will not assist in creating a single spark.

Miss CAREW, went through the part of the fair Diana, respectably. Although the songs are not of the description best suited to her voice.

Mr. LEONI LEE, as Francis Osbaldistone, acted indifferently, and sang with good effect.

In the Farce of Fortune's Frolick, Mr. OXBERRY was Robin Roughhead. He speaks the rustic dialect well, but he eternally reminds us of a Northern traveller enduring the catoethes.

DRURY LANE.

IF we tell our readers that, in the conscientious performance of our duty, we again visited this Theatre during the performance of Geraldi Duval, The Coronation, and Monsieur Tonson, will they believe us? We are convinced that any person of good taste, who has once witnessed these exhibitions, will hardly credit the assertion of any one who declares he has sat them out three times—yet such an ordeal have we gone through—determined to note the character of repeated audiences—to see how far the good or bad report of a frothy silly Melo-drame, a tinsel shew, and a simple Farce, had extended; and to observe the description of persons who could be delighted with each of these representations. Already we have stated the result of our observations in this particular—and we might have added the opinions of hundreds of exhausted spectators, who seemed pleased that they had for once gratified their wives and children with the sight, but appeared delighted that all was over.

We shall hail with pleasure the first proper opportunity to bestow praise on the management of Drury: but to have commended the late utter neglect at this House, of the higher branches of the drama, would, indeed, have been inconsistent with the task we have imposed on ourselves. It is always most satisfactory to our feelings, to be at peace with the Managers; yet war is inevitable should they continue to encroach on a province they ought to disdain to meddle with, and thus contribute to the ruin of the Empire of dramatic taste and genius. We shall await, with something like patience, the change of system which we are led to believe is about to take place, and happy shall we be if we can congratulate the public on a display of judgment skill, and liberality.

HAY-MARKET.

THE Opera of Rob Roy, which was performed for the first time on Wednesday night at this Theatre, was yesterday evening repeated, though its repetition did not in the least degree alter the opinion we entertained of Mr. Terry's qualifications for such a character as Macgregor. He did not mark the shades of disposition in this individual; 'twas one dull monotonous style throughout, wholly deficient of those strokes of bold humour and careless independence which mark the hero. The reply to Rashleigh, who reminds him of how long he has known him, was given with a sort of feeling which ill harmonised with his general conception and even his rage was not the firm determination of the mind and fury of the soul, but a bullying exertion of the lungs: upon the whole we think it inferior even to Mr. Yates's attempt. We must apologise to Mr. Tayleure for our limits not permitting us to do that justice to his delineation of the Baillie which it so much deserved; 'twas a most admirable piece of acting, which might serve as a model for Mr. Liston on his next attempt of the Magistrate. The play went off well.

Some ladies in the boxes by their agreeable prattle, endeavoured (we presume) to excite the attention of the audience, in which they very happily succeeded, for they incurred its severe and marked displeasure—the habit of talking loud in a place of public amusement is a most vulgar and rude one to indulge in.

Five or six persons in the Highland garb were in the pit during the Opera, and joined in full chorus in Auld Lang Syne, which was encored.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received a letter from "Argus" and acknowledge the many typographical errors that sully the pages of some of our numbers: but our correspondent has (unintentionally we presume) furnished us by his mistakes, with an apology at least for ours; for when two deviations, in his own composition, from the rules of grammar and of common sense, have escaped his "Argus" eyes, he should, we think, judge with lenity the errors of a hasty press. He admits the fairness of our criticism, for which we are his very humble servants: and if politeness is not generally blended with our remarks, it arises, we fear, from the just maxim, that truth and good breeding are not always very harmonious qualities, though we trust that we have never grossly violated the laws of either.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Stranger (in which play a young lady made her second appearance on these boards in the character of Mrs. Haller,) was repeated last night. This Drama, under the title of Misanthropy and Repentance, is from the pen of Kotzebue, and has been adapted to many stages, and translated into several languages by different dramatists; our claims to it originate with Mr. Thompson, who first produced it at Drury-lane: It has long been a favourite with the British audience, though strong objections have been made to it as a moral production, nor without some weight;—the interest is most powerfully raised, the feelings poignantly wrought upon, and the deepest sympathy and compassion excited for an individual, who suffers meritoriously for the committal of the worst breach of the laws of society and religion: nor is this all, palliations are offered for that crime, and the culprit finds an unconscious pardon and pity in the breast of every spectator. We do not wish to be fastidious, but we feel proud when we see a British public condemn the tendency of such works, and view the stage in its real character—a vehicle for the improvement of national morals and taste: and though such pieces may not, probably, affect the staid mind of age, nor the sobered feelings of experience, yet few parents would be discharging their duties to their children by suffering their softer feelings to be excited in so ill a cause. In Kotzebue's dramatic writings Madame de Stael observes, that there is not sufficient respect paid to strict virtue and positive religion; and that he has indulged in this error, not from adherence to system, but to produce occasionally a more powerful dramatic effect:—these remarks are most peculiarly applicable to this play. The young lady received much applause, and sustained the character with much effect. We felt inclined to question our judgment on her first performance, and not decide hastily in a certain point, on which our fears were last night confirmed—we mean the model this lady has chosen, and IMITATES in her conceptions and delineations—the late Miss O'Neill. We regretted at being convinced of this, as we think the young lady has great abilities which might be employed in a nobler purpose than that of servile imitation.

Mr. Young was INIMITABLE in the Stranger, 'tis a character most peculiarly suited to his abilities, and which he plays most perfectly.

Mr. Emery's Solomon was excessively droll and humorous.

Mrs. Liston sang in the play with peculiar pathos and feeling.

Mrs. Gibbs imparted a very pleasing humour and vivacity to the character of Charlotte.

Mr. Farley was very respectable in Francis.

The other characters were well sustained, though we have not forgot Murray's Tobias.

The entertainments concluded with Blue Beard, which was very indifferently got up. Mr. Duruset was not in good voice as Selim, and in his opening duet was rather out of tune. Mr. Blanchard's Ibrahim was very barren of humour.

Miss Love sang very pretty, in "When pensive, &c."

The House was well attended.

HAY-MARKET.

The Marriage of Figaro, Lovers' Quarrels, and Match-Making, attracted a numerous audience to this Theatre last night. The Opera went off with spirit. Mr. DE CAMP as Figaro is too personable for one who is a But. He clearly understands the part, yet cannot confer a comic form and pressure on all he has to say and do.

Miss Caren, and Miss Corri, and Mr. Leoni Lee, sang with good effect. However, no encore took place, except for a drunken song by TAYLEURE, whose manner sometimes reminds us of EMERY.

The other pieces told very well to a good natured audience, who did not appear to be of that refined class that refuses (as vulgar) to bestow energetic applause.

DRURY LANE.

ON Saturday night we had here the old exhibition of Bandits, Coronation Gentry; and frivolous Farce heroes. Another brilliant assemblage of straw bonnets graced every part of the House;—and the gentlemen (out of livery) were proportionally scattered amongst the fair ladies (-maids) and other females, whose domestic habits had superseded the necessity of using the rouge-pot to confer a bloom on their cheeks, or even on their noses. To these delicate creatures every thing appeared equally delightful. Duval, the robber—King Elliston, the Horses, and Monsieur Tonson, were perfect rivals for their favour, and they seemed to depart undecided as to which was the most charmingest. The Manager must be proud of the distinction his House meets with, from the uncommon attraction that attends these representations: and he must be proud of the personal applause that follows his individual exertions as the representative of the King of Great Britain. On passing in procession he regularly receives the cheers of his subjects, to whom he bows most profoundly with an evident intensity of feeling, created by the respect he owes to his character, and the consciousness of possessing a Treasury amply stored by a nightly tax on common sense and good taste.

But we have already entered our protest against the burthen thus thrown on the public, and have signified our desire to await patiently a change of measures favorable to the world of wit, and honorable to the sovereign of Drury. We, therefore, shall not at present enlarge on the subject of misrule, but shall trust to King Elliston's future patriotic management to save the British Drama from being utterly neglected within his territories; reminding his buskined Majesty that there is nothing in the Theatrical Constitution implying that he can do no wrong.

HAY-MARKET.

ROB ROY was again at this Theatre on Saturday the chief attraction of the evening, and as far as the exertions of the managers could contribute, (though they cannot make actors) not without success.

Mr. Terry's conception of Rob Roy still offends us much; and though this gentleman has no claims whatever to the character of a distinguished actor, yet he is always (or generally) a respectable one; and we are surprised that his judgment has not enabled him to form a more correct opinion of the hero of the play, than his delineation induces us to suppose he has; or perhaps his habit of acting, as we think it extremely peculiar, may not permit him to overcome that staid-sameness which characterises his general performances; but be this as it may, we expected to see from Mr. Terry a different personation of Macgregor Campbell, than he has been pleased to give us.

Macgregor is not a tragic hero, but blends with the most sensitive pride and feeling of his lost condition, the careless independence of the most intrepid bravery and determination, often marked with the bold humour of a man, who tells Rashleigh that he may be a "richer and more learned," but "is neither a braver nor a better man than himself." Upon the whole, Mr. Terry's was a dull stupid piece of acting, totally void of humour, feeling, or force.

Miss Carew is very unfit for the character of Diana Vernon; at least as far as vocal exertions are requisite; the simple, yet expressive music in this part, requiring a sweetness of voice and taste, which Miss C. does not by any means possess; her singing is an effort, often disagreeable, and in "A Highland Lad" extremely discordant.

Mr. Lacy as Capt. Thornton, with his old fashioned uniform, and his modern cropt head, looked like a monkey grinning at time.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE entertainments hitherto presented at this Theatre, though agreeable, yet mixed, have not been of a very varied description. Hamlet and Undine were for the fourth time the sources of attraction, and succeeded in drawing together a good Pit and Gallery House, though it was rather deficient in the Boxes. Mr. Young exerted himself last night with his usual effect, and received on various efforts the loudest and most unqualified approbation of the audience; though we wish the Gods would not exert their Stentorian lungs to such a pitch. Yet as they are almost out of sight, and quite out of hearing, uninfluenced by the amusements of the stage, 'tis hard that they should not enjoy their own innocent recreations; and their sympathetic yells contribute to rouse the energies of the performers. We wish they had communicated a little of their electricity to some of the second rate characters in the play. In the scene where Hamlet is closeted with his mother, Mr. Young gave two or three points with considerable effect, and though we still think that, on occasions, there is a want of fire and brilliancy in this gentleman's acting, his reading is so beautiful, his intonations so clear and natural, he carries our imaginations almost beyond our reach.

We are surprised that Mr. Emery, who is so great a professor of his art, should condescend to the customary gag of the twelve or fourteen waistcoats; such things may make the Galleries laugh, but they are beneath Mr. Emery, and such things may be sanctioned in a barn, but are below Covent Garden, "'tis a custom more honored in the breach than the observance."

DRURY LANE.

The entertainments here were composed of the old dishes—not at all to our taste. But the Theatrical Cooks are preparing something more palatable for us, we are told. Heaven send it is nothing in the Goose way.

HAY-MARKET.

Rob Roy and Match-Breaking drew a tolerably numerous audience here last night. Mr. TERRY'S Rob retains all the defects we have before noticed; and it is with much regret we see him persevere in a part, he is wholly unfitted for by nature. It would lessen our respect, in some degree, for his judgment, were we not aware that the most eminent performers have often mistaken their powers, and the Tragic and the Comic Muse thus found in their respective trains the servants of each other. A blunder that has frequently made one sister toss down her bowl and dagger to hold her sides with laughter, and the other to convert a merry look into the gravity of long-visaged stupidity.

In the second piece, Mr. OXBERRY as Courtier Solomon, acted like a vulgar Quack Doctor recommending a nostrum in language derived from some charity-school.

The approbation conferred on the entertainments and performers, were very duly proportioned to their merits.

---

We understand that Miss BRUNTON who recently graced the Covent Garden boards as a very fascinating actress, is about to become a member of the Dublin company.

Mrs. BARTLEY also contributes her powers to the support of that Theatre.

Mrs. CHATTERLEY, we are informed, will shortly be transplanted to the Covent Garden Stage; and Mrs. BAKER who is an agreeable actress, goes to the Adelpbi.

DRURY LANE.

MR. KEAN.

MR. KEAN is at present studying the part of De Montfort, in Miss Baillie's Tragedy of that name. She has accordingly rewritten the whole of the last act, in order to encrease the effect on the stage. We rejoice at the prospect of Mr. Kean's return to Drury; for we are not of that party who are inclined to underrate his talents. It would be extraordinary, indeed, after he has for so many years supported a high reputation before the most enlightened audiences in the world, that the peculiar and less cultivated taste of an American town, which did not entirely accord with his style, should have the slightest influence on our long established opinion of his high merits. We might offer, on the present occasion of Miss Baillie's undertaking to alter her play under his experienced suggestions, a proof of what are the sentiments entertained of Mr. Kean's acting by those most distinguished for genius. For our part we are delighted at the near approach of the period that will enable us to grace our pages with chronicling his personations, instead of some of those wretched exhibitions that at present disgrace Drury Lane Theatre.

HAY-MARKET.

THE entertainments at this Theatre last night, were The School for Scandal, Match-Making, and A Day after the Wedding, selected for the benefit of Mrs. Chatterley; who, as a favourite with the audiences of this house, and a very interesting and agreeable actress, had ample claims upon the support of a public, to whose enjoyment she has often contributed; and we were most happy to observe, that her rights on this subject, were not unacknowledged, the Theatre being uncommonly well attended. We confess that we did not visit the House last evening, in the anticipation of much gratification from the representation of The School for Scandal, as we could not divest our minds of the opinions we had imbibed of the qualifications of the performers, who were to sustain some of the leading characters—nor were we wrong—Mr. Terry though a very respectable Sir Peter Teazle, and in some parts peculiarly excellent, did not present that varied and complete delineation of the part, which we have been accustomed to witness, guided by the genius and requisites of Mr. W. Farren. 'Twas an outline not filled up with those shades and lights which give variety, effect, and figure to the whole.

Mr. Younger's Sir Oliver Surface was most respectable. But can our readers or—any judges of Theatrical characters and entertainments, imagine, Mr. De Camp in any one respect qualified for the dissipated, thoughtless, warm-hearted, yet gentlemanly Charles Surface; but this needs not an observation. Trip or Moses would have been ably sustained by that gentleman.

Of Mrs. Chatterley's performance on such an occasion we know not how far our observations would be consistent; but it in many parts displayed considerable ability.

Mr. Conway's Joseph Surface was in many parts excellent.

AMERICAN THEATRICAL REGULATIONS.

At the Theatre at New York the following regulations have been promulgated.

“The ladies are not to wear bonnets, nor the gentlemen their hats in the lower boxes, nor in any box in which there are Ladies. Turning the back on the audience during the time the curtain is down is prohibited, on pain of exposure in the papers. Walking on the seats is expressly forbidden;—and those who crack nuts in the boxes are to be considered as Hogs, and expelled.”

---

We understand that Miss R. Corri has taken a disgust to the profession which she so much adorned, and, contrary to the wishes of her friends, means to retire from the Stage, at the conclusion of the Hay-market season.

Mr. WARDE (of the Dublin Theatre) is performing at Waterford, where he is said to be a great favourite.

COVENT GARDEN.

We last night visited this Theatre, having previously loosened the reins of our imagination, in compliance with the mandates issued for that purpose by the Managers, in their descriptive accounts of the day. The House was at a very early hour excessively crowded, and we cannot describe the reviving sensations we felt, when on the drawing up of the curtain, the cool and icy plains of Siberia, in some measure dispelled the intense heat occasioned by the fullness of the Theatre. We presume that as Shows are now the order of the day, we must in compliance with the custom, as well as the general taste, attempt a description of the display which Covent Garden last night presented: and though we confess ourselves to be in some measure inadequate to the task of describing so arduous an undertaking, we shall make a few general observations on the entertainment. It was undoubtedly very splendidly produced, and no expense appears to have been spared. The nerves of the anxious auditors were at the commencement of the third act, most seriously agitated by the sudden appearance of three cords, which certainly announced something; and on the disappearance of the scene, the Triumphal Arch with all its decorations, struck on the all-admiring gazes of the audience: then appeared the Patriarch, Priests, Nobles, Ladies, the young Prince, under a canopy, the Ambassadors of Poland, Spain, France, England, Malta, Tartary, China, and their respective Suites, dressed in the costume of the different nations they represented; and finally, the Empress herself, drawn in a magnificent Car by six horses, followed by a troop of horsemen, kettle-drums, &c. &c. &c. The effect was certainly most brilliant. The second scene following this, represented the ceremony of the Coronation; and at the conclusion of the piece, the horses and soldiers again made their appearance, and with the aid of a car drawn by rein-deers, presented a very beautiful coup d'œil.

The whole was most warmly applauded, and its repetition announced amidst enthusiastic applause.

HAY-MARKET.

THIS House last night had a full Pit and Galleries, but indifferently attended Boxes. Rob Roy and Match-Breaking were performed with spirit, if not, in all their parts, with the excellence to be looked for from establishments that can command more histrionic talent.

An accident happened on the capture of Rob. Mr. TERRY expressed the rage of the hero with such Highland vigour, in dashing his dirk on the ground, that it sprang from the stage across the orchestra into the pit, but fortunately no one was hurt.

Mr. TERRY'S Rob met with applause.

Mr. LEONI LEE and Miss CAREW gave considerable satisfaction to the audience by their vocal exertions; but why does the former pay so little attention to acting his part? If it is a fashion amongst Operatic performers to neglect every thing but effect in their singing, it is one that had better be superseded by the vulgar good-sense of Hamlet, who directs actors "to suit the word to the action, and the action to the word."

Mr. TAYLEURE, as the Baillie, was in high favour throughout.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE again visited this Theatre last night in the garb of observation, to witness the repetition of the Exile; which, in our previous number, we announced to our readers had been revived in a very splendid and expensive manner. In our first notice of this Opera, the limits of our publication prevented our entering into a detail of the abilities or defects which the various performers, in their respective characters exhibited: and though aware how necessary these remarks were, in support of our assumed characters, we dare aver to that the horses, dresses, and individuals composing the procession, excited more interest and curiosity in the minds of the 'Theatrical public, than would the most scrutinizing observations on the intellectual department of the piece have done. Yet warned by our pages, we will without further remarks on this subject, enter on a more important one.

We understand that the character of Daran is particularly a favourite one of Mr. Young's (or to use a Theatrical phrase, is with that gentleman a pet part) we therefore went to the Theatre naturally prejudiced with the belief, that one so peculiarly selected and studied by such a great master of his art, would exhibit all the beauties and varieties, which a consideration of Daran induced us to allot to him: nor do we know any part on the Stage, which more admits of producing great effect, both from the language and situations assigned to it; yet we do not hesitate to say, that though many points were given with much judgment, beauty, and effect, the coldness which characterises Mr. Young's general style of acting, was never more chilling than on this occasion; and this we particularly felt, as from the assumed habits of Daran, as well as the situations in which he is placed, the wilder passions of the heart, are ever strongly played upon: but Mr. Young seemed to want the physical requisites for passion, our meaning of which we cannot better illustrate, than by an observation of Garrick's; whose opinion being asked of the manner in which an actor performed a drunken part, replied that "his legs were sober."

Mr. W. Farren's performance displayed all that fullness of humour, and correctness of character, which so much marks this gentleman's general style of acting. It was very warmly received.

Mr. Liston played in a very natural manner Baron Altradoff, and sang with very good effect. The duet with Mr. Farren was encored.

The House was remarkably well attended.

A Mrs. Tennant made her second appearance on the Covent Garden boards last night in the part of Katharine, she seemed very timid, but her acting was as nearly deficient of expression, as her singing was, of power, sweetness, and taste.

DRURY LANE.

THE old entertainments here continue to draw good houses; and last night proved that the rival attractions of Covent Garden had not lessened the desire to witness the Coronation of George the Fourth. It is this splendid spectacle of the fac-simile of an event that will be handed down to posterity that alone confers on Drury the distinction it at present enjoys of well-filled benches. But this will have an end,—the circle of curiosity has a termination; and the love-sight public will, when once gratified, flock to new scenes of pageantry. We would condemn this fondness for shews, and this readiness on the part of Managers to gratify the vitiated taste, did they not, at one House, at least, endeavour to mingle something more worthy of our admiration with the gaudy trappings of splendid ceremonials.

Constructed as our two principal Theatres are, it is, perhaps, necessary to resort to means of gratifying the eye in some parts of the exhibitions, for many persons find it impossible fully to catch the words of the actors; and were not something done in the course of the evening's amusements to stop the murmurs of the disappointed listeners, there would be many more habitual absentees than there are.

HAY-MARKET.

WE never in our lives felt a greater inclination to comply with a wish than we feel on the writing of this to accede to that, expressed by Harmony at the conclusion of Every One Has his Fault, that "all Friends here will speak well of us behind our backs." The play was most admirably acted, and reflects the highest credit on the exertions of the performers. We have not space to individualise their merits, but it was most warmly applauded throughout, and its repetition was heard announced with pleasure for Saturday next, rapturously received by a very full audience. We would venture to hint to the Managers, however, a rummage in the wardrobe for better livery for the servant of Lord Norland, as well as more suitable dress for his valet or secretary.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE success of the Exile might be supposed calculated to banish us from this Theatre on its nights of performances; it might be thought, that having twice attended its representation, we would be satiated with the splendour of the scenes, and processions, and fatigued with the repetition of the dramatic story and enactment. There may be some truth in this—but we are not always frequenters of the Theatre for our own gratification. We have a duty to perform towards our readers—we are the agents of the play-loving public, and it is our part to see and hear on behalf of those who are not able or disposed to be present in the Theatre. Our number admits of a regular attendance of one of us at each of the principal Houses; and there we are nightly to be found. Generally there is enough of novelty, if not on the Stage, at least amongst the audience, to keep us awake, and thus enable us to be the watchful Observers, and the faithful recorders of any important Theatrical matter that may occur. Our pages thus become a close, unbroken, though brief chronicle of what principally concerns the acting-drama; and the whole of our labours for a Season, may form, we would hope, a volume not uninteresting at a future period. Our penny pages may look insignificant to Cheese-mongers or Pastry-cooks, and purchasers of Snuff-paper, may turn up their noses at our want of accommodation to Rappee or Lundijote, but we court not their custom, being rather ambitious that our little paper should escape the unpleasant office of covering a quarter of a pound of butter, enveloping a patny, or being deputy to a snuff-box.

THE EXILE again drew an immense concourse last night, who rivalled preceding audiences in their testimonies of approbation.

Miss Foote's performance of Alexina was excessively interesting though deficient of the expression we have seen given to this character, and which it certainly admits of; she pleased without delighting.

We highly approve of the intention evinced by the managers of this Theatre to give us variety in the after-pieces during the long run to be expected for The Exile; and we think, indeed, without aids of that kind, the attractions of this splendid piece will not tell to the degree hoped for.

The Farce of Husbands and Wives, which followed the Opera, was infinitely amusing—the performers exerted themselves to gratify so brilliant and numerous a body of spectators, and accordingly received due acknowledgments on all sides.

HAY-MARKET.

THIS Theatre last night contained a very respectable audience to witness the entertainments of Rob Roy, A Day after the Wedding, and A Roland for an Oliver, which was certainly a very well regulated bill of fare. We were happy to observe that Mr. Leoni Lee, profiting by our hints, threw a little more vigour and consistency into his acting, though many of his starts and important looks are still out of place. If a friend was to read over to this gentleman his parts and explain the sense of the different passages, it might contribute much to Mr. L.'s advance in his profession.

Mr. De Camp made the character of Major Galbraith very amusing and conspicuous by his acting and singing.

Mrs. JOHNSON'S Helen Macgregor has spirit enough, but the powers of her voice are not adequate to give force to her ranting. Mrs. Egerton of Drury Lane has the great advantage in characters of this violent description of being able to spout her fury in a key that harmonises with our ideas of a virago.

In the Interlude, Mr. De Camp played Colonel Rivers; we wish this gentleman would never assume the latter character upon the stage, for we assure him that he is wholly unfit for it.

Mr. Williams' Sir Mark Chase was very humorous and chaste: this gentleman is a highly useful and pleasing actor.

The House was good.

DRURY LANE.

We had Geraldi Duval, The Coronation, and Monsieur Tonson here again, on Saturday evening. The House was full, and the applause abundant, particularly during The Coronation; for who can withstand the captivating graces of His Theatrical Majesty.—It is, really, well worth seven-shillings to witness the royal bow, and the occasionally abstracted, but dignified manner of the mock-sovereign. The KING of Drury, certainly, deserves well of his country, for so lengthened a representation of what must gratify every truly British heart. We are convinced that more good service has been done to the cause of loyalty by the Theatrical Coronation, than by the original Westminster Ceremony. For the latter had but its influence over the imaginations and feelings of the rich and gay, who may be said to inherit courtly sensations; whereas the Drury ceremony has had innumerable one shilling—two shillings—and three and six-penny subjects, who are well known to be chiefly composed of poor grumblers, whose hearts are not always inclined to swell with gratification at thoughts of the powers that be. Yet from these has the Monarch of the Stage drawn willing tributes of applause on behalf of the Monarch of the State. If, at the next batch of knights, there is not a Sir Robert William created, we shall, indeed, be much surprised.

The sister Theatre, which has ventured on a rival spectacle, will, we imagine, derive its success from a somewhat different cause than the mere love of pomp, glitter, and noise. There is a strange inconsistency and perverseness in human nature, that too often leads us to be fond of fostering any thing that has the appearance of opposition. Thus the very applause than has attended the representation of a King's coronation at one house, will, on this principal alone, breed innumerable thunderers of approbation at witnessing a crown placed on a roman's head at the other. And what does this signify to the Managers? What do they care whence patronage flows, so as the stream comes their way, and deposits on the banks of their treasury the golden sediment, washed from the mountains of folly and fashion?

HAY-MARKET.

In a previous number of our publication we made a few general observations upon the comedy of Every One has His Fault. It was on Saturday evening repeated at this Theatre in consequence of the universal and merited approbation it excited on its first representation: nor do we think that the sentiments which that event created, were in the least degree, lessened by its recent repetition. The comedy is from the pen of the late Mrs. Inchbald, an individual the memory of whom is intimately associated with the dramatic history of the present age, to which she has contributed by many theatrical productions, and by her critical essays and remarks upon the acting drama of the day. In her general style of dramatic writings there appears a greater effort at the production of effect, than is probably consistent with nature or propriety; there is an evident aim in her works at the legitimate source of scenic literature—the prevailing follies of mankind and of society. Yet the mirror she has selected to reflect them in is of so magnifying a nature that our features are too distorted to be recognised by self-love and vanity as our own; or in other terms her characters fail of effecting the point intended, by becoming rather burlesques than imitations, which observation is perhaps peculiarly applicable to the play at present under consideration: the leading characters in it are not the general members of society; and if ocasionally encountered are so highly extravagant as to be more in danger themselves of being avoided by their neighbours than the latter are of imbibing the eccentric features of their characters.

Mr. Conway performed the character of Irwin in a most feeling and admirable manner, depicting the various passions of the heart most energetically. The scene with his wife in which he reveals to her his robbery, was given in a very masterly manner, untinged by extravagance yet forcible and feeling.

Mr. Terry's Harmony was in his best style, the dry humour of the character being admirably suited to his peculiar style, though there were some feeling touches which would not have disgraced a Kemble.

Mr. Oxberry's Solus, though rather extravagant was humorous and spirited. This gentleman reminds us of one who has St. Vitus' dance.

We feel happy at paying to Mrs. Chatterley the just tribute due to her abilities, and acknowledging how erroneous was the ill conception we entertained of her requisites for the tender delineations of the stage; her acting in Lady E. Irwin was most excellent; and the scene with her son and father displayed most powerful talents for the more serious walk of the profession,—the dew drops sparkled in the eyes of all around us, who seemed sensibly affected.

The House was well attended; and the Performance are, this Evening, Every One has His Fault. and The Review.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Exile continues to attract. The Procession and Coronation were loudly applauded. We think there is frequently too much space between the different Ambassadors in the Cavalcade, which produces, at times, a meagre effect: and we have to state our decided aversion to the manner in which the Chinese Ambassador is personated. Mandarins, we beg to observe, can keep their heads steady: and it is not because our tea-shops have Chinese figures with moveable noddles to attract gaping customers, that we are to look for fac-similes of them in a stage representation of a Chinese ambassador. The poor fool, who last night rolled his head about for above half an hour, must have got a stiff neck. We hope we shall not again witness so awkward an attempt at misplaced drollery.

---

DRURY LANE.

There was some novelty in the performances at this Theatre last night. Instead of The Coronation being accompanied with Geraldi Dural and Monsieur Tonson,—The Dramatist and The Weathercock were played.

The comedy went off well: and in the farce our old favorite Miss KELLY appeared, as Variella, for the first time this season, and was received with a hearty welcome. There is something very reviving in seeing the return of faces to these boards with which we have been accustomed to laugh, or to feel our eye moisten; and amongst all those that have delighted us, we know not one who is more entitled to our warm remembrance for successful exertions towards our gratification than Miss KELLY. She did not, however, in our opinion, select a part very suitable to the exhibition of her powers, for her entree for the season. Variella is a tolerably amusing character as far as it goes, but it is too slight to afford room for a considerable impression in favor of any one that fills it. If she was determined to come out in Farce, why did she not choose Nell in The Devil to Pay, which gives her some opportunity to display her comic talents.

Mr. HARLEY makes an excellent Tristram Fickle; and last night gave us a touch, in his address to the Jury, after the manner of a certain learned Serjeant, who is remarkable for a healthy complexion, a soft voice, and a peculiar urbanity of manner.

We do not admire the Briefwit of Mr. W. H. WILLIAMS. Having had the pleasure of seeing MATTHEWS act this part on the first night of The Weathercock, we cannot forget the eccentricity of his action, in which consists all the humour of the character.

The House was not full.

HAY-MARKET.

WE visited this Theatre last night to again witness the entertainments of Saturday evening, and having previously seen the play of Every One has His Fault twice within the week, (though each time highly delighted with the performance) we will candidly acknowledge that we entered the Boxes with a hearty yawn, which almost exceeded the capacity of our jaws, when with a dismal face an apologist came forth and announced "the incapability of Mr. Conway (from illness) to support the character of Mr. Irwin—the kind undertaking of Mr. Baker to supply his place, and the willingness of Mr. Tayleure to officiate for him, in this emergency—relying, &c." It would not be liberal to make any critical remarks on the exertions of either of these gentlemen on such an occasion; and we shall content ourselves with observing that they both strove to supply the defects occasioned by this unfortunate circumstance.

A Mr. Johnson, from the Bristol Theatre, sustained the character of Sir Robert Ramble; and though he wants vivacity and richness of humour for so important a line of his profession, seems well acquainted with the stage and its business, yet he sometimes offends by an appearance of affectation, a very repulsive quality in an actor. His apology for his inability to assist Irwin was that of a coxcomb, and not that of a gentleman, or a man of any delicacy, masking 'gainst his inclination, his better feelings under the cloak of fashion.

Miss Boyce and Mrs. Tayleure did much justice to the characters of Miss Weoburn and Mrs. Placid, and we should be wanting in gratitude, were we not to name Mrs. Pearce's Miss Spinster. The Play went off well.

Miss Green, a singer, and late of Covent Garden Theatre, was led on Tuesday last to the Hymeneal Alter by a Mr. Bedford, a celebrated vocalist and actor on the Dublin boards.

Mrs. Bunn is engaged to lead the business at the Bath Theatre.

DRURY LANE.

WHEN we inform our readers that the performances at this House, last night, were Geraldi Dural, The Coronation, and Monsieur Tonson, they will not be surprised at our declaring the utter inability we labour under of making a single new remark upon the edifying exhibitions of the evening.

We are, at this moment, circumstanced pretty nearly the same as a musical pupil who is set down to practice for hours together, The Dead March in Saul, or God Save the King, or The Minuet de la Cour; and who, when at length the dull repetition is over, joyously dashes away at a voluntary or a merry jig. So we, who have undergone night after night the penance of boring over the hacknied horrors, regalities, and meurvements, contained in the above-mentioned Melodrame, Spectacle, and Farce, gladly fly to any whim that can drive them out of our memory.—Well—what shall we say? What shall we do to fill the little blank space before us? Shall we take a refreshing walk in Bridges-street, or as a foreign friend of ouis cal's it—Breeches-street? which name, by the bye, Mr. PARR, of the corner cloathes-shop, would, we think, have no objection to.—Well, here, at this very shop let us breathe awhile—and gazing on the towering fane across the way, let us for a moment indulge imagination.

We think we see before us the future favored haunt of genius—yes—it is that over which presides a man of taste, judgment, and liberality. As we gaze, we call up to memory the history of past-times, when the Comic Muse was loosened from the trammels of decency: when she rather sought to dazzle and allure than teach the heart its proper feelings, and the understanding its just limits.

We proceed in fancy through intervals of vigour and propriety to the revolutionary period, when morality attempted the merry Muse's life, and left her lingering to these days in the hands of wretched quacks. But, surely, within yonder Temple we may not ineffectually put up our prayers for her preservation—for there is a High Priest who well knows the most grateful sacrifice—Yes, revered Sage, lay bare on your smoking Altars the bandits—the screaming virgins, and scolding house-keepers of rock-lodged thieves—stretch the glittering coats of mail—the flaunting flags—consume them all, and with them the brainless skulls of Spectacle Projectors, and Bombast Manufacturers.

HAY-MARKET.

THE Beggars' Opera was last night performed, and introduced to this stage a young lady, as Captain Macheath.

We will not, on the first appearance of the fair debutante, enter on minute criticism; but as she performs again the same part this evening, we shall await her less embarrassed efforts to enable us to give a decided opinion on her merits, which are evidently considerable. She was much applauded and was encored in "When first at her looking-glass," and in "How happy could I be with either."

In the meantime it may not prove uninteresting to our readers to insert a critique upon the Opera itself, from the works of a celebrated modern author. He says, "the merits of The Beggars' Opera are particularly its own. It not only delights but instructs us, without our knowing how, though it is at first view equally offensive to good taste and common decency. The materials, indeed, of which it is composed, the scenes, characters, and incidents, are in general of the lowest and most disgusting kind; but the Author, by the sentiments and reflections which he has put into the mouths of highwaymen, turnkeys, their wives and daughters, has converted the motley group into a set of fine Gentlemen and Ladies, satirists, and philosophers. What is still more extraordinary, he has effected this transformation without once violating probability, or "overstepping the modesty of nature." In fact Gay has, in this instance, turned the tables on the critics, and by the assumed license of the mock heroic, still has enabled himself to do justice to nature, that is, to give all the force, birth, and locality of real feeling to the thoughts and expressions, without being called to the bar of false taste and affected delicacy. We might particularly refer to Polly's description of the death of her lover, and to the song, "Woman is like the fair flower in its lustre," the extreme beauty and feeling of which are only equalled by their characteristic propriety and naivete. Every line of this sterling Comedy sparkles with wit, and is fraught with the keenest and bitterest invectives. It has been said by a great moralist, 'there is some soul of goodness in things evil,' and The Beggars' Opera is a good natured but severe comment on this text. The Poet has thrown all the gaiety and sunshine of the imagination, the intoxication of pleasure, and the vanity of despair round the short lived existence of his heroes, while Peachment and Lockit are seen in the back ground parcelling out their months and their weeks between them. The general view of human life is one of the most refined and abstracted kind."

COVENT GARDEN.

WE need scarcely preface our remarks with the usual notice that "last night was performed at this Theatre the Opera of The Exile," as it and its sauces were rendered so palatable to the tastes of its past digestors that it promises now to become a standing head dish of Theatrical entertainment. The code of policy to which our great managerial monarchs at present subscribe, appears to be the production of one or two cards, (no offence to the whist table, 'tis a technical phrase, and reduced to a common term signifies novelties) in the season, with the view of running them for a considerable number of nights, while the interims between their announcements are filled with old stock pieces to the production of which no other (beyond common) attention is devoted. How far this system realizes the expectations of the managers, or the hopes of old Theatrical grumblers like ourselves, we leave to be answered by the head member of the Treasury, and the occasional groans uttered during our observations.

The Exile went off with the usual celat, and seemed to give very general delight. We thought that Mr. Young once or twice in his character, wound his energies beyond their usual exertion, and in his appeal to the peasantry, who intercept Elizabeth, drew from the audience the most enthusiastic applause.

Mr. Duruset sang his first song with much taste.

We do not think it fair in Mrs. Fawcett to arrogate to herself the applause bestowed equally upon herself, her car, and horses.

Miss Beaumont performed the character of Patrick in the Farce of The Poor Soldier, in a very pretty and interesting manner. The song of "My Friend and Pitcher" in which she was engaged, was sang with much good taste.

Mr. Liston's Darby was irresistably comic.

The House was crowded to excess, and the piece announced for repetition amidst great applause.

HAY-MARKET.

The success attending the representation of The Beggar's Opera here, on Tuesday evening, occasioned its repetition last night, with the second appearance of the young lady

We might say much on the subject of young ladies, undertaking to represent a rakish robber—but as the present instance is by no means the first, we shall not be so fastidious as to delay our remarks on her performance, by unavailing objections on that point. We cannot, however, omit to observe, en passant, that neither propriety, nor the due effect of the Opera are supported by a female Macheath.

Miss BLAKE's voice is full and harmonious in the lower notes, but rather harsh and unmanageable in the upper ones—She certainly possesses taste and judgment, but they are in want of the perfecting touches of experience. When time and study shall have diminished her present defects, and improved what is already beautiful in her tones and style, we may be inclined to rank her high amongst our vocalists. In the mean-while, she cannot be considered sufficiently excellent to hold, permanently, a leading station before a London audience. In person and manners this young lady has nothing to stand in the way of a successful career. She acts with tolerable ease and good sense for one going through the ordeal of metropolitan criticism; and it is our sincere advice to her, that, if she is devoted to the Stage, she should pay much attention to acting, as, we imagine the peculiar qualities of her voice will not elevate her much above a part-singer: and, therefore, it is essential to her progress to be somewhat independent of her vocal powers. She was much applauded, and was encored in many of her songs.

Some have drawn comparisons between this lady and Madame VESTRIS: for our part we think Miss BLAKE cannot vie with the other songstress, whose spirited execution and peculiar attractions beyond those of her voice, have fixed her a high favorite with the public.

We had great reason to be pleased with the Polly of Miss R. CORRI, who had several encores. Her voice is well calculated for a Theatre of such moderate dimensions as this house.

Mr. TERRY and Mr. WILLIAMS enacted Peachum and Lockit in good style—but they might have worked up the quarrel scene better. Whoever has seen Munden and Dorton in these parts must have been doubly conscious of the want of the rich and elaborate humour the two latter gentlemen exhibited before they came to the scuffle.

Mr. J. RUSSELL's Filch was very like a young rogue.—Mrs. Jones makes too comfortable a Lucy.—Mrs. PEARCE as Mrs. Peachum was excellent.—The Opera altogether went off with spirit.—The house was well attended.

COVENT GARDEN.

This Theatre continues to benefit from the gorgeous display of the Coronation Spectacle in the Exile. The wet-weather did not, last night, damp the ardour of the sight-loving portion of the public: but the house, at first price, although not quite full, was honored with an overflowing Pit at half-price. Mr. YOUNG really, has a most powerful elocution, he lays on the emphasis so justly and energetically, that we feel at once conviction and emotion, from his addresses to the judgment and the heart. He is a highly popular performer; for JOHN BULL is delighted with forcible action, and a bold correct delivery. One who like Mr. Young does not mince his part, but gives us the whole joint smoking hot, and well-dressed, is as greatly to JOHN'S taste, as the most able purveyor of roast Beef and plum-pudding. Thus, last night, this true English Theatrical cook, served up such substantial declamation, that BULL roared bravo till he was hoarse, and made the house shake with his corporeal expressions of delight.

We are happy to perceive that the Empress's grand Ceremonies draw as well as ever—and that the drums and trumpets have most harmonious accompaniments in all parts of the Temple. There was one thing we observed which gave us much offence, (the Manager need not be alarmed)—the offence we mean was not against our theatrical, but our national feelings.—Actually not a single Ambassador was applauded except the English!! Not a Pole, Sipahdar, Pooshmar, Tartar, nor a Chinese, was hailed with a solenn applause!! We blushed at the ill-breeding of our countrymen: sensible as they must have been of many foreigners being in the House. Indeed, in the box in which we sat there were some outlandish folk, who in the Russian or P. Fish tongue seemed to sneer at the politeness of Mr. Bull. We felt so humbled at this egregious self-love, that fearing we might be discovered to be English by the said foreign gentlemen, we changed our position to a box where we were tormented with the vagaries observations of a drunken man, who exclaimed at the hereship inflicted on him by being compelled to witness the Exile for the sixth time!—He had a lady with him, which accounts for his visit, and no doubt for his impatience.

A Roland for an Oliver followed the Opera, and was well received.

DRURY LANE.

A "SPECIAL DESIRE" by the Lord-knows-who, (a man of taste) produced here, last night, the repetition, for the twenty-seventh time, of Geraldi Dural—for the sixtieth time of The Coronation, and the seventeenth time of Monsieur Tonson.

MAY-MARKET.

WE last night visited this Theatre to again witness the pieces which had constituted the chief entertainments of the last two evenings. The Managers of this establishment adhere as strictly as do their brethren of the greater houses, to the reigning love of the times, which we gave a sketch of in our number of yesterday. And as we presume that the old proverb, "Id certum est quod certum reddi potest," is as applicable to theatricals as to other subjects, we should certainly as a mere observer say, that policy was not so favorable, we mean productive, to the interests of this Theatre, as it may be to the treasury of the others. The former would be more certainly promoted by a succession of variety, than by puffs and the dullness of monotony. Though we cannot advance this common place remark without coupling with it another, in justice to the management—that they have promised to build the reputation of the establishment upon the solid foundation of intellectual and refined entertainment, and that the generality of pieces during the season have not only been of that description, but have been produced with an attention to their success highly creditable to the exertions and good taste of their conductors. Miss Blake was last night well received, though the repetition of her exertions did not remove the opinion we imbibed of her abilities from the first representations. Some of her middle tones are good, but her falsetto is harsh and discordant, and though she displays taste and science, they are not of so captivating or so accomplished a nature as to arrest and lead the feeling. She promises more as an actress than vocalists in general are—she appears to have great confidence and ease, two very essential acquirements in her profession.

Miss R. Corri received a considerable deal of applause in Polly, and certainly not without deserving it.

The rest of the characters were very respectably supported.

Rumour says that this Theatre is going to be re-organized, and that Mr. C. Kemble and Miss Dance are to lead the business. Such an arrangement would much contribute to the interests of this establishment, as with the aids of those individuals, and some few late members of Drury Lane, the company would stand unrivalled.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE mentioned in our Covent Garden article, yesterday, that a person somewhat inebriated annoyed us a little with his loud exclamations against the frequent representation of The Exile. This person who was genteely dressed, declared he had purchased a free-admission to this Theatre, and felt it an act of injustice on the part of the Manager to cut him off from that variety of amusement which he had paid his money for.—"I've seen this d——d stuff six times over," he cried—"And here I'm obliged to sit it out again."—Then, when the horses made their appearance, he was about to express his indignation loudly, when the lady who accompanied this free critic succeeded in getting him to lower his tone, and confine himself to muttering something about "shame"—"robbery"—Astley's"—&c. &c.—This wise-acre, although he acted a very silly part in this Box-scene, had certainly some reason to complain of not being able to see within the space of a week, any Play but the one, which, however, did not make an Exile of him from the Theatre. It is very melancholy to think that this gentleman should be obliged to see a Play not only six times, but, perhaps on six times six occasions, in order that the great body of the public should be afforded an opportunity of beholding once the attractive Drama. The free-man, no doubt, conceived on his buying his privilege, that he was to have nightly novelty provided for his special enjoyment, and it is lamentable to think he should be disappointed. We, who are really obliged, ex-officio, to attend the Theatres on each night, might have similar cause of complaint as far as regards our personal entertainment, but we are philosophers who keep our faculties and our passions for the public benefit; therefore, when we think there is some rational cause for dramatic repetitions, we consent to give an occasional yawn, and be as good-humoured as possible.

The Exile still treads the snows of Covent Garden, but not in a desert.

The Entertainments, Bombastes Furioso, and The Rendezvous, last night, closed the performances with infinite satisfaction to a most brilliant and numerous audience.

HAY-MARKET.

THE Managers of this Theatre, imitating their brethren directors of the sock and buskin seem determined to sicken us of all relish for Operas or Operatic talents, by cramming down our throats that which we might digest agreeably if relieved by a little variety, as the insipidity of a single dish is often rendered palatable by the refreshing influence and interposition of a few glasses of Sherry or Madeira. The Beggars' Opera and Match Breaking! were again, last night, the forced-meat of entertainment. We are afraid that our frequent recurrence to the organs of digestion to assist our descriptive powers on the subjects of taste and entertainment, may obtain for us the appellation of Gourmands; yet we assure our readers that though we are quite sensible of the merit and charms of both, we merely introduce the former as a metaphor most likely to be generally understood and felt. But to return to our subject. We presume that Miss Blake is competent to support other characters in the musical department, even should this be her chef d'œuvre; and we do not seriously think that the impression she made was of that vivid and extraordinary nature to warrant the frequent repetition of the same character. It may be answered (not against ourselves, for we are but the servants of the public) that visiting the Theatre is not compulsory; this is true, but Theatres are the schools of public amusement, nor is it consistent either with the duties or interests of their conductors to debar a considerable portion of the reflecting part of the community from them, because the Managers choose to adhere to either a system or caprice. If the views with which their repetitions and announcements of "brilliant" success are made, be the factitious support of the individuals of their selection, such a measure cannot be conducive to the ultimate success of the object,—as talents always find their level when public taste is their criterion, and such a course is an injustice to those persons of established merit and fame, who are ill rewarded for their exertion and abilities, when new performers are with little discrimination encouraged by these artifices, and thrust forward to the public to fill stations already ably sustained. Let every new candidate for public favor receive the measure of approbation that is their due, but let not the Managers sacrifice the respectability of their Theatres, their performers, and profession, to such short sighted policy. These remarks we generally apply to all the Theatres.

This Theatre closes on Friday the 2nd of November.

We understand that Mr. Munden will soon resume his professional duties at Drury-lane Theatre.

DRURY LANE.

It would appear that the Manager of this Theatre, is resolved as long as his Coronation can attract an audience, not to trouble himself about gratifying the part of the public who were in the habit of going to the Play to enjoy genuine wit and humour. On Saturday night he gave us with the above mentioned Spectacle, the worn-out feats of the Bohemian Bandit, and of Monsieur Norbleu. This indifference to the demands of discriminating friends of the British Stage, is most impolitic; and we will venture to assert that the injurious consequence will soon appear, when this Theatre has nightly to compete with Covent Garden.

We are, indeed, convinced that the interests of both our principal Theatres must suffer, unless variety and sterling-merit in the first pieces are depended on, in preference to a temporary attraction that does not conduce to a solid estimation of Theatrical amusements. In our opinion no Drama, however successful, should be run night after night beyond a ninth time; for that affords a sufficient opportunity of gratifying the most urgent; and, then, by giving the novelty and a Stock-piece alternately, there would be a closely continued attraction for the different classes of Play-goers.

Next week both Covent Garden and Drury will be open every evening; and the exertions of the Managers will be more particularly required to fill their Houses: but let them not depend too much on the improved times rendering the public more disposed to purchase amusements—those times have brought with them habits of economy, and it must be something worth their time and money that will cause them to be steady customers to our dealers in Theatricals.

HAY-MARKET.

THIS Theatre on Saturday evening presented to the public a little novelty, compared with the dull sameness of entertainment to which we have been for some time past accustomed; though, as additional ATTRACTIONS, Match Making and A

Day after the Wedding swelled the bills of the day. These frequent repetitions of such pieces must either prove a great want of good taste, or a strange poverty in the performers or means of the Theatre to contribute to the gratification of the public. Of the company we have sufficient evidence to prove otherwise, nor is there a scarcity of authorship or pieces, we therefore cannot help attributing this defect to no other source than mismanagement. The audiences that frequent this House are not, as at the greater ones, of a very varied description, but composed of a certain class of people generally denominated play goers: now we beg leave to ask the managers whether, having paid five shillings to once witness the representations of Match Making, Match Breaking, or such pieces, they would either a second time pay that sum to sit out their repetitions, or reserve their entrance fee for an occasion more likely to produce novelty? to this there can be but one reply consistent with the general feelings of the public: and this want of policy and proper management we more sincerely regret, as the Company is excellent, the means of producing novelty great, and the good wishes of a large majority inclined to the support of this establishment. The Theatre closes soon, but we have heard it rumoured that it will, ere long, re-open: this we shall much rejoice in, and hope, for the welfare of the House, and all the circumstances necessarily connected with it, that a better plan of attack will be laid for the ensuing campaign. Goldsmith's Comedy of She Stoops to Conquer, was the play on Saturday evening, and though an old Theatrical stock piece, possesses that merit which an able delineation of must always render it a source of great amusement. Goldsmith, whose works are enshrined at the altar of Fame, consecrated by the breath of genius, and engraven on the recollections of posterity, was born at Forney, in the county of Longford, in Ireland, 1731, and died in 1774; but to our task, Mr. Johnson's young Marlow we were upon the whole very much pleased with, though the first interview with Miss Harcastle was rather caricatured; this gentlemen without being at all a striking actor, is rather a pleasing one. Mr. Terry's old Harcastle was excellent, his reproof of Marlow, who then discovers his error was very forcible and true. Mr. Oxberry's Tony Lumpkin, we think one of the best characters in which we have seen this gentleman. Mrs. Chatterley played in a very neat manner Miss Harcastle.

The House was good.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE lovers of the Drama were last night regaled with a most intellectual treat at this Temple of the Muses, the only entertainments being the Exile and The Warlock of the Glen! Melodramas and Spectacles have certainly become the popular amusements of the generality of persons who frequent the Theatres; and though we observe this degeneracy of taste with regret and sorrow, we do not think that the existence of such a sentiment in the public mind, in the least degree exonerates the Managers from the cultivation, we might say creation, of so debased a principle. The Directors of the Theatres are likewise the directors of the opinions of the multitude on topics of scenic and public gratification, which being only controlled by the false taste, whim, or private interest of the former, may easily be converted into channels diametrically opposite to those which good sense and feeling should dictate as consistent with the arduous and rather important situation they sustain. Of the truth of these remarks we have made relative to the influence of Theatrical spectacles upon the imagination, and indeed, mind, feelings, and habits of a public, we have testimonies in corroboration both in ancient and in modern history. It, therefore, is a duty inseparably connected with the situations of Managers, to model, to purify, and to preserve a refinement of sentiment for theatrical exhibitions, which might cultivate the seeds of philosophy and morality, occasionally relieved by the refreshing dews of wit and humour.

The House was very full.

DRURY LANE.

THE Play-bills of this Theatre yesterday gave the following important intimation.

" Mr. ELLISTON being compelled to quit Town on Legal business, Mr. COOPER will this Evening fill the character sustained by Mr. ELLISTON in The Coronation."

We must confess we at first felt a little alarm on reading this announcement. The idea of KING ELLISTON being compelled to quit his territories under Legal influence, had something in it that appeared like the overthrow of a dynasty :

but, then, we reflected if such were the case, the loss of the Theatrical Crown would hardly be trumpeted forth to the world by the ci-devant Monarch. We, therefore, were relieved from our terrors at the imagined revolution, and were inclined to interpret the meaning of the above Proclamation into a mere declaration of foreign affairs demanding the presence of the Sovereign of Drury out of his dominions, and of the appointment of a Regency in the person of Mr. COOPER.

We last night witnessed a confirmation of our last mentioned understanding of the said State Paper, by beholding the Royal functions supported with much dignity by REGENT COOPER. And we have to congratulate King Elliston on the royal discrimination exercised on this great occasion.

The attendance of nobility and gentry was not considerable.

HAY-MARKET.

WE have to acknowledge an error in our yesterday's number—She Stoops to Conquer was not played on Saturday evening, nor Match-Making, but The Beggar's Opera and The Village Lawyer. This change was occasioned, we find, from the sudden indisposition of Mr. Baker.

We have now to explain how it was possible we could make any critical remarks, short as they were, on the performance of the Comedy which we erroneously stated to have been acted.—The gentleman who undertook to report to us the proceedings of the evening, was accidentally, and unknown to us, prevented from attending. Thus circumstanced we made some prefatory and general observations on the conduct of Theatres, and then in some dozen lines gave those slight remarks on the acting which we had drawn from the previous performance of She Stoops to Conquer at this House.—We trust it is unnecessary to add another word on the subject to satisfy the liberal part of our readers. They must be conscious that it is a very arduous engagement with the public, which we have entered into, namely, to attend every performance at the principal Theatres—the present occasion is the only one on which we have deputed our duties to another, and we must bear the consequences of this non-attendance; but for the future we shall not run the hazard of depending on one not interested and bound to be, as we feel ourselves, faithful Reporters, and just Critics.

The House was very full last night to witness The Green Man, and The Beggars' Opera.

A Gentleman, in the character of a Pick-pocket, performed his part so badly as to be turned out of the House.

The Performances for this Evening are The Marriage of Figaro and Match Breaking.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Exile, though it may banish our inclinations from this House, does not appear to decrease in popularity, if we may presume so to judge, by the overflowed state of the Pit and Galleries. It is the province of critics and reporters who decide upon the merits of the age, and with profound looks and deep fears of import furnish opinions for the unthinking portion of mankind, and, are in short, the "brief acts and chronicles of the times," to build in their imaginations an aerial code of laws for that they criticise, constituting the acme of the human intellect, and which derives its perfection from the utter unlikeness it bears to all the opposing truths of nature, ages, and of man. This opinion self-love preserves, and indeed blessed is he (since to live is but to exist for others—or ourselves) who detecting all mankind to be—or verging into darkness, with patriotic zeal, unfolds the vast machine of mind which guides his fears, and opens to error the approach to truth. Such are, when analysed, the generality of periodical and book writers, and if from the noble trunk which bears the tottering fate of man, one little branch should spring, unworthy of the roof it was engrafted on, the parent stock by the sweet hand of commerce. Much, we acknowledge, might be said on this subject with reference to Theatrical criticism, but which our limits will not now permit to be discussed; yet in this, as in all actions which have "mankind's interest" and "mankind's good" as causes, they allow much latitude for the display of eloquence and of imaginary principles but effect, we fear, but little towards the promotion of the attested, though not always the object of primary consideration. The House was exceedingly well attended.

DRURY LANE THEATRE was last night well attended.

HAY-MARKET.

THE Opera of The Marriage of Figaro really was given here, last night, with unusual spirit and effect. Miss CAREW as the fair Countess, sang and acted exceedingly well. There is a pleasing softness of look and manner in this young lady, that highly corresponds with the delicacy of her taste—there is a sentiment in her eye and her acting that gratifies our best feelings, and best ideas. She is never masculine, nor hoydenish, but gentle, and correct in her style of performing; and her vocal science are at once delicate, and, almost brilliant. In Miss CORRI we perceive a somewhat different source of attraction—yet what that difference consists in signifies not—she does engage, yet that avowal coming from old fellows like us, must not be taken as an impulse of a giddy heart. Of Mrs. CHATTERLEY, we are almost afraid to speak. We don't know how it is, but this lady makes us feel like young men.—Our age is restored at the arch-smile—the animated movements—the—the—but we must not proceed. The Cherubino was every thing that could be wished—sly—playful—amorous—timorous—in short, a very good-for-nothing dear little rogue. We hope soon to have many opportunities of witnessing the performances of this agreeable lady at Covent Garden.

With respect to the gentlemen, we have only to record, en masse, our grateful recollection for their exertions to amuse us—some succeeded—some were not entirely so fortunate. We are not much inclined, at present, to be out of humour, for the Haymarket Theatre has something enlivening in its very name; but as stern Critics we must not forget our duty—We, therefore, knit our brows, and enter our solemn protest against Mr. LEONI LEE's brown pantaloons, which to our taste appeared most incongruous, topped as they were with his green jerkin. He really must excuse us, but in our eye we thought he resembled an animated Tree, whose dark trunk was surmounted by a rich foliage, from whence issued the notes of a Bull-finch.

The House was very full.

COVENT GARDEN.

WHAT can we say of The Exile? Why really nothing but that it is most beneficial to this House. Nightly it draws "overflowing" and "brilliant" audiences—so say the Play-bills, and so say we, as to numbers in pit and galleries, but as to brilliancy we are afraid it is in some degree of the mock quality. For we are of opinion that the many elegant houses shut up in all parts of town have not emptied their inhabitants into our Theatres. We think, therefore, that the Managers had better reserve the above mentioned fashionable expression until the end of this month, when we may chance to see a few diamonds and stars glittering in the Boxes.

The Poor Soldier last night was excellently and humorously performed. Mr. DURUSET played Dermot in consequence of Mr. PYNE being indisposed.

DRURY LANE.

"Again and again that everlasting d—le page," we must ask pardon of our readers for making this quotation from The Marriage of Figaro, but its feeling so forcibly struck us as applicable to our persons and sentiments, that we have e'en risked its expression. We need scarcely after this apprise our readers that Geraldi Duval, The Coronation, and Monsieur Tonson, were again last night the sources of attraction—and, to such as were attracted, the springs from which amusement flowed. On the subject of these entertainments we must confess we have nearly exhausted our stock of patience and observation; but the announcement of the bills which promise on Saturday next the re-appearance of our old favorite Munden, and on Monday the production of a new Comedy, incline us to amity: and while this Theatre by laudable and legitimate measures, strives to support its rank of respectability, we wish it, and will yield it, all the support which such measures deserve.

HAY-MARKET.

A very numerous audience, last night, were drawn to this House by the performance of The Beggars' Opera,—the Captain Macheath of Miss BLAKE, and Polly of Miss R. CORRI, again forming the main attraction. The former lady certainly improves on us in some degree; but it is still our opinion that the peculiarities of her voice will greatly limit the range of operatic characters in which she can appear with effect. She introduced the song of The Wolf!—but, in our opinion, most injudiciously for her own sake, although very advantageously for the Theatre, by raising curiosity to hear a female voice distorted in mocking the bass notes of this famous piece. Such was the folly of the audience, that although Miss Blake was evidently fatigued with this uncommon exertion, they made her sing it a second time, until her voice nearly broke down under the severe trial. She met with much applause throughout. Miss CORRI likewise had her full share of well-merited approbation.

The Peachum and Lockit of Mr. TERRY and Mr. WILLIAMS, were enacted, with much comic effect—the quarrel scene in particular was admirably managed; and really Mr. Williams often most strongly reminded us of our old favorite DOWTON, whose place at Drury-lane, he might fill to good purpose. We sincerely desire to see this gentleman retained there, as they want one in his line most woefully.

Mr. HAMBLIN played Filch in the place of Mr. J. RUSSELL, and much did we regret the change.

The Performance for this Evening, are The Beggars' Opera, Match Making, and Fortune's Frolics.

COVENT GARDEN.

After The Exile, the musical farce of Brother and Sister, was acted last night. This is a tolerably amusing piece, with some very pleasing music, and it was performed on this occasion uncommonly well in all its parts.

Miss HALLANDE, the once sinking, timid Miss HALLANDE, has now gained an easy confidence, and filled the character of Donna Isidora with spirit and propriety, and sang delightfully.

Miss LOVE, as Rosathe, was very animated, and her first song was given in such a captivating style, that an inevitable encore ensued.

Mrs. LISTON, and Miss E. GREEN as Agatha and Camilla, were very correct.

Mr. FAWCET, as the warm old knight of Calatrava, Don Christoval, infused so much good humour into us, that we hardly could remember we had assumed the Critic's wig, but shook our ambrosial curls, without bestowing a thought on their discomposure.

Mr. DURUSET was a tolerable Don Silvio; and Mr. LISTON as Pacheco gave himself all the airs of a prime minister with the self-sufficiency of manner that we might look for from an individual, who, like Pacheco, had no grounds for it but empty vanity. This character, by the bye, resembles that in an agreeable farce, which appeared some years ago, called The King and the Duke, in which a private secretary to a ci-devant statesman assumed the ministerial and diplomatic jargon and importance.

The House was quite full.

THERE was a moderate House last night to witness Geraldi Duval, The Coronation, and Monsieur Tonson.

HAY-MARKET.

WE again, last night, attended the representation of "The Beggars' Opera." This piece was first acted at Lincoln's-inn-fields, in the year 1727, and is, as most of our readers must know, the production of JOHN GAY. When it was first represented, the Italian Opera had grown into much fashion, but was for a time wholly obscured by the success of this happy effort of Mr. Gay's pen. The satire of this piece is at once poignant and striking, and was aimed by the Author at the Court, in consequence of his having been, as he conceived, much neglected. The original representative of Polly, was Miss Lavinia Beswick, who was bred up at the bar of a public-house; her father was a Lieutenant in the Navy, upon whom her mother had no claims, save those which her charms had created. She married, while her daughter was yet young, a Mr. Fenton, in consequence of which our heroine became known only by that name. Her first appearance upon the Stage was at the Haymarket, in the part of Monimia, at the early age of eighteen. She was afterwards engaged by Rich. for Covent Garden, and becoming the Polly of Gay's Opera at that House, captivated the Duke of Bolton, by her unrivalled fascinations as an actress and a singer; the Duke was at that time a married man; she lived with him as his mistress for the long period of 23 years—at the end of that time his Duchess dying, she succeeded to her honors, which she enjoyed for nine years. Widely different was the fate of the original Macheath;—Mr. Thomas Walker, whose company being from his success in this part much courted by the Libertines of the day, destroyed his constitution by continued dissipation, and having gone to the City of Dublin, died there in very great distress in the year 1744.

We have no further remarks to make on this entertainment, as its frequent repetition presents not the least novelty of observation. The performers exerted themselves with their usual success, and received from the audience numerous expressions of approbation. This Theatre closes to-morrow night for the season, and the chief part of the actors enrol themselves with the Olympic Company; we confess that we shall bid them adieu with regret, for though public functions have forced us into observations oftener consistent with our duties than with our feelings, we regard them as the beguilers of many tedious hours.

Mr. HAMMOND again supported the character of FILCH instead of Mr. J. RUSSELL.

TO THE READER.

THE success which has attended our efforts in this entirely novel publication requires to be acknowledged with warm thanks; and the commencement of a New Volume may, perhaps, be the fittest time to do so. We, therefore, beg our Subscribers will accept our grateful feeling for the extensive patronage we are favored with; and we request that they will receive this First Number of our Second Volume, improved in size and type without an increase of price, as a proof of our desire to extend the usefulness of the Paper to those who visit the Theatres Royal Drury Lane, and Covent Garden; and, in their season, the English Opera, and the Haymarket Theatres, and who feel interested in Dramatic or Histrionic details.

As, the advantages held out by this Publication may not be thoroughly known to every one, we have to state that it daily contains some short account of, and observations on the performances of the previous evening, at the two principal Theatres open: and also COMPLETE BILLS OF THE PLAY at both Houses for the night. Thus presenting at a trifling expense, a constant record of past Theatrical representations, combined with full and authentic particulars respecting the performances to take place, which, from the early hour of publication, may be procured through the Newsmen for the Breakfast Table. Having thus explained the plan of The Theatrical Observer the present opportunity might be taken to say something of the principles that have, and will guide it. But our Motto may well save us the trouble of entering on this subject at any length; we will, however, add, that, if we have been sometimes a little sportive, we trust it has not been mistaken by Managers, Performers, or the Public, for any thing bordering on personal content: a feeling that should we ever express, must, indeed, be called for on strong grounds. We, who are independent of any private connection with the Theatrical World, and who take up our pens for worthy purposes, write under the consciousness of what is necessary to the safety of Theatrical property, and of what is due to an honorable Profession; but above all, of what is called for in support of a correct public taste relative to the Drama and the Stage.

THE DRAMA.

"Quantum a rerum turpitudine abes, tantum te a verborum libertate sejungas."—TULL. There is perhaps no task in which the vanity or interest of man engages, that is so little understood, more generally assumed, or that requires higher and more expansive qualifications for its just discharge than does the task of criticism. It is the competitor of man and of the age, the hand that draws aside the veil beneath which their blushing follies creep, and holds "as 'twere, the mirror up to nature. To trace and check the flowing tide of sophistry and error—to faithfully pourtray the lineaments of truth, though hid 'midst the dark folds of prejudice—to dive into the whirling vortex of society, and bear from thence the pearl, divested of its shell, are the superior duties of the critic's charge. Yet strictly applicable to the subject of these general remarks are the just lines of Pope, that "Those who cannot write, and those who can,

"All rhyme, and scrawl, and scribble, to a man."

This weakness is, perhaps, merely the public vent of that which exists in the characters of men and of society; yet glides away unsatirized, almost unseen, when kept within the limits of the humble sphere—for 'tis the habitual indulgence of all its members. In truth, nature and education render man the critic of his fellows: and writing is but the Pegasus on which self-love, ambition, and necessity soar above the dull routine of common life.

Of the various subjects which become interesting and proper objects of criticism as relative to mankind, the Drama assumes a rank not unimportant 'midst the highest: not only from the powerful influence it possesses over the moral system of the rational animals of creation, pruning the rose-bud of its withering stems, and giving to the parent stock and its symbolic offspring, fresh beauty, unity, and strength; but as it affects those springs of intellectual purity, from which an important stream of literature flows. Few observations will be deemed necessary to illustrate the former proposition: and let the lucid beauties of a Sophocles, the overwhelming grandeur of an Eschylus and an

Euripides ;—the keen sharp satire, and the lax wit, of Aristophanes ;—the chaster efforts of the Terence pen ;—the noble bearings of Corneille and Racine ;—the lively satire of Moliere ;—the flow of eloquence in Alfieri's works ;—the high-strained imagery of Schiller and Kotzebue ;—the deep researches into nature's depths which mark a Shakespeare's genius,—and the mellowness of a gay wit which raised a Beaumont and a Fletcher's fame—speak for the importance of its latter power.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Exile, which was last night performed at this Theatre, we have noticed in previous numbers. The House was well attended, and the performances elicited much applause. This evening there is no play.

HAY MARKET.

This Theatre, last night, closed its Summer Season, with Match Making, The Beggars' Opera, and A Roland for an Oliver. After the conclusion of the Opera, Mr. TERRY came forward and addressed the audience.

He stated that he was deputed by the Proprietor to express his gratitude for the patronage he had received during a short season, which had met with peculiar obstacles. The Winter Theatres, as they were called, had made great inroads on that period which ought to be left to their exertions under a licence so limited as that of the Haymarket : and in particular, one of these Winter Theatres, he said, had wholly intruded on their Season, and erected itself into a Summer Theatre. He then referred to their past exertions, and stated it to be the determination of the Proprietor to make reprisals, and convert, as he felt he was warranted by his license, their Summer Theatre partly into a Winter one ; and declared no means should be spared in the interim, to study the future accommodation and gratification of the public, by such alterations and improvements in the Theatre as might be necessary, and by fostering talent wherever it could be found, in order to maintain the character of the legitimate British Drama.

We join with the audience of last night, in wishing the greatest success to the Little Theatre ; and shall await the announcement of its new Season with high expectations of future entertainment, worthy of the neighbourhood of the ancient haunts of Foote, Colman, and a hundred other originators and supporters of genuine wit and humour.

THE STAGE.

It has been the custom of the two great Theatres, as they are generally termed, to perform during the commencement of the Winter Season but four nights each in the week; this arrangement, originating, we presume, in the idea of the city being at that period rather abandoned, is still adhered to; though when the tempting allurements of gain presented themselves, Mr. Elliston but imitated the great mass of mankind, and in one or two instances sacrificed custom at the shrine of interest. The period prescribed terminated on Saturday last: and we may now look forward to both Theatres entering the lists in regular and nightly competition for the public support. It is a very general observation, founded on truths elicited from facts—not mere opinions, that the British Drama has much deteriorated from its once exalted rank, and has become a mere bauble for the amusement of the vulgar and the weak, addressing the imagination, not the intellect, and lost to all those noble causes which have operated upon, and might aid the moral influence of society. "Immanea monstra perserimas."

—VIRG. In fact the stage is no longer viewed in the latter light we speak of: and its reference to society is no further found, than as it cloaks its weaknesses, and holds allurements to its vices. We are aware—regulated as the British theatres are—that individuals who embark in them considerable private property, and enter upon their tasks as managers with no other considerations towards the vast machines they regulate, than those of its repaying their exertions and expense—regard the stage as an object of mere speculation; refraining not from any sacrifice of respectability or propriety to realize their selfish expectations. This system however consistent with mean and worldly opinions, we consider as not only degrading, but impolitic: degradation must ensue, when a power which is in itself noble and important to mankind, is perverted to mere sordid uses: and the narrow minded policy is as evident—for Theatres like Covent Garden and Drury-Lane, which are supported by the enlightened and educated portion of society, will find a greater security in their success by erecting it upon rational and solid foundations, than by encroaching upon the petty privileges of Minor Establishments. We would recommend the Managers to seriously reflect on this.—The Haymarket opens, we understand, in April, with Mr. C. Kemble, Dowton, &c. and a powerful number of legitimate performers. The Olympic Managers have engaged a highly respectable company, which would not disgrace any representations. The West London Theatre has produced Œdipus, which though we smile at in one point of view, still proves the disposition to charge the encroaching enemies into their very lines. Should fashion in a capricious fit, once fix her abode beyond the limits of Covent Garden and Drury—we congratulate those houses upon this superiority of skill in Melo-dramatic productions.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. REYNOLDS' Play of Folly as it Flies cut down to three acts, was performed here on Saturday night. It is usually styled a Comedy, but if a mixture of farcical humour and common-place sentiment is deserving of that name, what must we call those Dramas that contain sheer wit, and exhibit human nature without the soporific aid of dull truisms? Would it not be better to adopt some new title, in order to separate effectually, genuine from false Comedy? Suppose we were in future to call Plays that, like Folly as it Flies, aim at creating horse laughs and tears, by the name of Risi Lachrymose; and add a Muse to the nine as their protectress, whose features should be drawn paralysed on one side, and convulsed on the other!—The admirers of this species of Drama would then know on the announcement of a Risi-Lachrymose, when to gratify their sublime taste, and would not of course run the risk of being entrapped to witness a mere Comedy, but leave room in the Theatre for the silly worshippers of Shakespeare, Beaumont and Fletcher, Ben Johnson, Farquhar, Sheridan, &c. &c. who wrote Comedies under the influence of a Muse that did not patronise pocket-handkerchiefs.

The Play of last night is a weak effort—the plot without ingenuity—the incidents without striking effect—the characters vulgar, insipid, and purely farcical—the language prosing, pointless, and ridiculous—yet it was applauded! It is really, painful to observe a British Metropolitan audience thus bestow praise on what degrades both taste and judgment. The favor, however, shewn to the piece might justly be attributed to the excellence of the acting.

Mr. ELLISTON as Tom Tick, with the little means the part affords him for a display of his comic talent, did wonders for Mr. Reynolds, who was equally obliged to our old friend, and ever-lasting favorite, Mr. MUNDEN, who condescended to enact Peter Post Obit on his first appearance this season. On the latter gentleman's coming on, unanimous and vigorous plaudits greeted the resumption of his Theatrical duties. He seemed in good health, and trod the Stage with a courage that appeared to set the Gout as much at defiance as Mr. Cursitor or Doctor Infallible. We heartily wish he may long crow over the enemy of his long toe.

The Farce of The Spectre Bridegroom, a very absurd affair, concluded the Evening's amusements—and a thin audience went away not in the highest state of good-humour.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE presume (or rather hope) that the entertainments last night selected at this House were chosen in consideration of the numerous school-boys and mechanics who were yesterday enjoying in idleness the anniversary of the Guy Faux plot—by the bye what an opportunity escaped the vigilant perceptions of Managers, in permitting the grand ceremony of chairing and burning that immortal character to be monopolized by the youthful rabble! though policy on one side dictated probably this inattention to so important a consideration of taste and interest, as an encroachment upon so ancient a privilege might have met with severe reprisals from the offended parties, who went, yesterday, through rehearsals quite sufficient to qualify them, without further drilling, for the characters they are to sustain in the approaching spectacle of The King's Visit to Dublin. The Exile and The Warlock of the Glen were last night the amusements offered at Covent Garden. This, from the laudable spirit evinced by the Managers at the commencement of the campaign, we are indeed surprised at. The repetition of the Exile may be consistent with their interest, or rather with the present laws of Theatrical policy; but in the names of decency and taste, why exclude from the Theatre all sensible beings (who would willingly beguile a few hours in rational amusements) by the joint and only performances of The Exile and The Warlock of the Glen? the latter an absurd mixture of Melo Dramatic trash. The Bills have hitherto endeavoured to present a living aspect, by uniting The Exile with after-pieces possessing some claims to common sense and taste, and such a dereliction as the present we would willingly ascribe to no other cause than that which we have assigned at the commencement of this article. We seriously advise Mrs. Tennant, to relinquish the profession she has chosen: she has not capabilities of voice to sustain in a theatre like Covent Garden the first or even second line of singing characters, and much study would be requisite ere as a stationary actress, she will be, in the latter capacity, tolerated by a London Audience ; her faults in this line are perhaps not more numerous than those generally evinced by novices (presuming that she is one)—an entire ignorance of all the qualifications necessary for the Stage ; and though a few years experience might enable her to assume them, yet towards attaining any distinction in the line she has chosen in the profession, she has, we fear, vocal impediments.

DRURY LANE.

LAST Night a "New Musical Comedy in two Acts," entitled MAD OR WIFE, or The Deceiver Deceived, was performed here for the first time, and was received with the greatest approbation.

It has a French air about it—light, and agreeable, and not over moral. The Plot is as follows : a Sir George (somebody) is at his Country seat, and his lady absent on a visit. Sir George is intended to be represented as a compound being, made up of conjugal fondness and libertinism. He studies Crockenthorpe on conjugal fidelity, and runs after the village girls, by turns. One of those rural damsels has particularly smitten him, and he communicates to his valet Ready, his resolution to go in search of her, merely for the purpose of obtaining her to wait on his lady, and directs the servants in the mean-time to obey Ready, who having been his master's confidant in his intrigues, has an annuity of £50. settled on him by Sir George, to be paid so long as he is unmarried. It happens, however, that the Valet has privately married Fanny, the very lass his master is in pursuit of. This discovery is very embarrassing to poor Ready, who wishes to keep his annuity and his wife whole and entire. The amorous knight goes through the first steps towards seducing the simple girl, but is constantly foiled and deceived by the ingenuity of his Valet, who at length recals her Ladyship by express, and the discovery of Sir George's infidelity is only prevented by the discovery of Ready's marriage, which relieves Sir George from his embarrassment, and he, therefore, rewards Ready by promoting him to be his Steward, and Fanny is thus retained in the family to the great delight of Sir George.

Mr. ELLISTON as Sir George, was animated.

Mr. HARLEY as Ready, bustled and fidgeted with effect.

Miss COPELAND, who made her debut on these boards as Fanny, was a sweet simple Country girl, with a voice not unlike Mrs. Liston's. She met with great applause, and was encored in the song, describing her Courtship. At the conclusion of the piece, when Miss SMITHSON, who was Sir George's interesting Lady, says of Fanny on her becoming a member of her household, that she is sure "she will become a favorite of every one in this House" the concurrence of the audience was expressed in the most flattering and decided manner. We may, therefore, congratulate Miss Copeland on her becoming a permanent member of the Drury Lane Company, in which she will sustain simple or rural characters in a very superior manner.

Madame ESTRIS made her first appearance this season as Don Giovanni, and was received with much approbation.

DRURY LANE.

MAID OR WIFE, or, The Deceiver Deceived, was repeated here, last night, with equal success to that it met with on Monday evening. As we have given the Plot, and our general opinion of the piece, we shall take leave on the present occasion to say a few words on one of its faults—one which strikes at the very root of its becoming an universal favorite with the public. The fact is, that MAID OR WIFE? is a most unfit play for either maids or wives to witness. It is not merely from the plot being founded on the grossest breach of the marriage vow, that we object to it, (because many dramas have exhibited to good purpose, an infidelity in the marriage state which brings with it its own punishment) but it is that we do not find the dereliction of principle in the present piece, rendered available to any moral lesson. The commencement exhibits a husband who has every reason to love his wife with a steady attachment, seizing the opportunity of her temporary absence to inveigle into his house a poor simple country girl resident on his estate. He openly, before all his servants, entertains her, rustically attired as she is, and places her in the seat of his absent lady, practising all the disgusting infatuation of a mad-headed seducer! What must be the thoughts of our spouses and daughters all this time! Why they must surely feel that this is no company for them—no sight for virtue to dwell on for an instant; and they must desire that the nauseous scene should be quickly terminated, in order that the monster may be duly punished. But this does not ensue—the Lamb is still under the paw of the Wolf; and it is not for want of appetite that the innocent thing is not devoured. The poor creature is mouthed and hugged, and is constantly on the eve of being dragged to the den, which the brute is only prevented from entering by the Shepherd's dexterity, and not by any compunctious feeling: and when at length Sir Wolf is caught, he is allowed to exist without a scratch, and howl out his delight at the sweet little bleater being placed in a situation where he can easily get at her at any time, and eat his tit-bit at leisure!

In our opinion Mr. ELLISTON will do well, if this affair is to be continued, to give it as an after-piece, in order that the numerous family of the Sober-sides may retire, after enjoying some more chaste performance, and leave room for the almost equally numerous family of the Gay-ones.

VOL. II.

COVENT GARDEN.

She Stoops to Conquer was last night performed at this Theatre, and introduced to its boards our Haymarket favourite, Mrs. Chatterley, in the character of Miss Hardcastle. The comedy possesses infinite broad humour and spirit; and though the chief incidents and situations (in short plot) are very forced and inconsistent, and generally deficient of dramatic unity and propriety, yet there is such an agreeable variety in the characters, so much humour elicited even from those parts less deserving of the claims of consistency, that when ably supported, this comedy can never fail of delighting most spectators. It is but justice to say that it last night produced that sensation; yet we could not avoid being amused (though we rather inclined towards pity) at the critical good nature of an audience, who bestowed a round of applause upon the ingenuity which Miss Foote and Mr. Liston displayed at the scientific game of "cat-cradles."

Mrs. Chatterley was very warmly received, and throughout the play and at its conclusion, was very much applauded: she appeared to make those exertions which the novelty of her situation demanded; and in some parts of her performance was very effective. This lady possesses an agreeable vivacity and humour, united to a general correctness of style, and an archness of manner and expression, which will ever render her a favourite, and such a one as Covent Garden stage is much in need of. Yet Mrs. C, though a highly pleasing and useful actress, has not those qualifications which will enable her to assume a distinguished and very prominent line in the Drama; there is a sameness in her comedy, and for the highest walk of that branch (the Miss Hardy's Lady Teazie's, &c. &c.) a want of point, force of expression, and conception. Where liveliness of character and archness of humour are necessary to be portrayed, we know no actress more qualified for the task; but when the superior powers of the mind are necessary to be exerted, and shades of character delineated, this lady is far from being fully competent for the task.

Mr. Liston was admirable in Tony Lumpkin.

Mrs. Davenport played with great force and spirit.

Mr. Jones is wholly unfit for young Marlow; but as we presume the play will be repeated, we shall reserve further remarks on this delineation till our next.

The play concluded with considerable applause—and when Mr. Abbott announced the performances, for this evening, some few silly people demanded its repetition—we hoped that all such Theatrical disease and machinery had been banished.

The House was not well attended in all its parts.

COVENT GARDEN.

Our visit last night to this Theatre, and our observations on the state of the House (which we compared with the preceding one) almost induce us to refrain from bestowing upon the Managers that censure, which their want of energy and taste in indulging the present depraved partialities for dramatic, or rather scenic entertainments we thought deserved. Though the cause undoubtedly exists with the Directors, the effects, we are sorry to remark, are now seriously engrafted on the public. On the evening previous to yesterday's the amusements were The Stoops to Conquer and Brother and Sister: pieces admirably calculated to gratify a refined audience; the former a comedy of sterling merit, most ably supported, and in which a favorite actress made her debut on these boards; the latter an after piece, from the representation of which, the disciples of Apollo could not fail of receiving infinite delight,—the House was very poorly attended. Last night The Exile, The Coronation, and the Melo-drama of the Blind Boy! a collection of bombastic stuff, show, and nonsense,—the House full.—Such is the prevailing disposition towards the British Drama.—tempora mutantur! The Exile went off, as usual, well. The Blind Boy was the concluding after-piece, written by Mr. Dimond,<sup>4</sup> and possessing all those long-winded beauties which characterizes his dramatic writings—by the bye what a happy thought of the Stage manager who attended the first rehearsals of these pieces, was the introduction in particular scenes of chairs on the stage: as it would have been a most inconceivable inconvenience to any performer who was blessed with the character to which the relation of the plot of the piece (in about 80 lines) is generally assigned, to have stood during its recital. We would recommend (should a repetition of this, or any of Mr. D.'s pieces occur) night-caps to the audience, the cue for using which would be, "you shall hear," and the bringing forward of chairs.

Mrs. Chatterley was not so effective in the character of Edwin as we have seen it rendered: and the want of a bandage over her eyes (an inconsistency we could easily have pardoned) gave an idiotical expression to the countenance when it was contracted by a smile: there was besides, too formal a stiffness in her manner which was very disagreeable.

Mr. Fawcett was extremely energetic in the character of Oberto, and kept alive the imagination in a very forcible manner.

Mr. Blanchard as the fool of the piece gave to his part all the characteristics of folly, both in manner and appearance which it demanded.

VOL. II.

Not written by Mr. Dimond
Published by the Author, and Sold by Miss Foote was very interesting as the fair Evelina.

There are some gross inconsistencies in this piece, (though of a style almost beyond the pale of criticism) which betrays a want of ingenuity in its arrangement. Kalig delivers a state secret in an open garden, and leaves with a loud and energetic display of lungs and loyalty. Mr. Oberto addresses Edmund as the Prince, before half a dozen soldiers or statues: and the Christian Queen, (we presume, from the names, dresses, and titles) calls upon the protector of her ch. H "in the names of all the gods who watch over the safety of Sarmatia" though this we suppose is a poetical license allowable to Queens as to Authors.

The House was very full.

DRURY LANE.

In our remarks yesterday on the new musical Comedy, Maid or Wife!, we gave Mr. Elliston a hint to reserve this piece for that portion of an audience which does not run the risk of being corrupted in moral taste or principles, by the nature of any Theatrical exhibition. We allude to those who frequent the Theatres at half-price, without any particular object of amusement or instruction from what passes on the Stage, and to those who are from age or philosophy proof against the dangers of vicious example. We are, however, disappointed, as yet, in the hope of our advice being taken: for Maid or Wife is still placed in the front of attraction, and of course our young people must either go to see an improper play, or remain at home.

The Coronation with all its noise and glitter, it is true, may drive out from the youthful mind the remembrance of the seducer's arts. But then comes Don Giovanni with his Libertine gambols, personated by the pretty gay VESTRIS, to restore all the recollections and ideas that the Pulpit weekly labours to root up and send to the sovereign of those infernal regions from which Giovanni escapes with impunity. We are no Jeremy Colliers, but we conceive there are some dramatic bounds to be kept within, for the honor and advantage of society; and, we will add, for the benefit of the Theatre; for there is a numerous class still to be won over to witness dramatic representations.

The House was well attended.

COVENT GARDEN.

UNDER this head we, in our yesterday's number, made some few general observations upon the present vitiated taste which constantly predominates in the public mind, with regard to Theatrical exhibitions; and though we most seriously condemn the destructive policy assumed by the managers, which has gradually led and fixed the debased sentiment which at present exists, we feel suspicious at, and in vain strive to satisfactorily account for, the paradoxical truth—that though education is more generally diffused in the present age throughout all classes of society than it ever was at any period on the records of history, the public taste, (a sentiment which is the offspring of reflection and refinement) was never, perhaps, at a lower and more puerile ebb than at the present time. We do not think that the morals of this æra are more depraved than those which mark the dispositions of our ancestors, as a few years back will introduce us to the wanton follies of Charles the Second's reign, and all the gross indelicacies which, under the definition of wit and humour, characterized the dramatic productions of the authors of those, and even of later days. The British Stage was never at a higher point of respectability than it is at present, as relative to its members, many of whom grace and dignity by their attainments and manners, the highest ranks of real life, and they faithfully and scientifically pourtray the walks of imaginary existence,—it is not them, then, but the Managers, who, unpossessed of those patriotic and liberal sentiments which should guide their actions, connected as they are with the public feeling, blindly pursue a present interest to their ultimate ruin, and corrupt and taint the springs of taste and entertainment. Were Covent Garden or Drury Lane to publicly announce a change of system, abandoning the present as derogatory to their station—to seek for talent which might supply what vacancies exist—to nurse the seeds of dramatic authorship—to bestow upon the production of some revised Comedies or Tragedies one half the trouble and expense bestowed upon their rightly nonsense, and speculate upon the British Drama, not upon British folly. success and patronage would, we are convinced, continually crown their efforts,—till then—farewell to the stage as a source of manly amusement, as we cannot play our childish hours o'er again.

After the Evile, last night, the amusing Farce of Too Late for Dinner was performed with much spirit.

The House was crowded.

DRURY LANE.

MR. KEAN.

WE look forward to the re-appearance of Mr. KEAN at this House, next week, with feelings somewhat similar to those of a traveller who has long been wandering across the sandy, barren deserts of Arabia, and who at length spies the well-remembered grove that shades the delicious rivulet where nature may be refreshed.

Truly, we have endured the desolation of Drury for many a weary hour—we have met in our tract herds of bandits, who have robbed us of almost our whole stock of patience—we have often nearly sunk under the heated atmosphere, but it was not produced by the heavenly rays of genius, nor was there a Castalian Spring to slack our literary thirst.—We have beheld the moving masses of light absurdities, and felt ourselves too much alarmed for the existence of common-sense to smile at them.—We have, in short, urged the conductor of the Theatrical Caravan to enable us to avoid these dangers and sufferings, by expediting our approach to the spot where reason and taste might have their fill, and recline in luxurious delight: but his economy had furnished us with lame camels—and he appeared to think that so the ignorant and indifferent were but amused for a season, and he was paid for his trouble, it mattered not, whether we Critics, travelled with satisfaction or not. Now, however, a period of our journey is at hand, that empowers him to advance in a manner consistent with his duty and our feelings and we willingly forget the past, the more ardently to enjoy the prospect before us.

Dropping metaphor—we in plain language hail the return of our ardent personifier of the passions. But amidst our anxiety to witness the display of his powers, we cannot but enquire how he is to be supported in the other characters of the Dramas he may appear in?—more of this hereafter.

The House was well attended last night, to see Maid or Wife? The Coronation, and Monsieur Tonson.

DRURY LANE.

MR. MUNDEN.

"What has become of Mr. Munden?—Is he laid up with the gout?" This is in every one's mouth—and we reply, he is not laid up with the gout; but Mr. ELLISTON must answer whether or not he is laid on the shelf. He has appeared one night this season, to the delight of the town—was announced for a second appearance in the Farce of Who's Who, but suddenly another Farce is substituted, and we hear no more of our old favorite! Why is this, Mr. Elliston? Why are we deprived of Mr. Munden's genuine humour? Is it to make room for the display of your own talents in the equivocal character of Sir George GOAT, (or some such name) in your new piece of attraction for the drabs and bloods of Drury? Or have you offended Mr. Munden by placing him in the rear of the entertainments, and thus seeming to represent his powers of attraction as being best calculated to draw the half-price gentry, instead of those who are willing to pay the first-price for your brilliant efforts? But, perhaps, we may be asking very impertinent questions; and it may be possible that Mr. Munden has only withdrawn to study some new part, more worthy of his station in public opinion than even that of Sam D.B. Time will shew this. And however it may turn out, we know we speak the sentiments of the best friends of the Stage, when we say, that to keep back the admirable humour of Mr. Munden, where there is room for Comedy, is robbing the public of their rightful enjoyment, and making that gentleman appear as unimportant a piece of lumber as any of the Procession-walkers in the Coronation.

COVENT GARDEN.

Foy the second time did this Theatre degrade itself by The Exile, and The Blind Boy; but as we are ever willing to accept, and even seek for causes which may serve with the Managers as palliatives for their want of taste and proper feeling, we suppose we must ascribe the repetition of two such classical and intellectual entertainments during the same evening, to the philosophical propriety of weaning the public mind from the fatigue of show which it endured yesterday, while lost in admiration of My Lord Mayor's Procession: and like the schools of Plato or of Socrates, instruct the mind how to regain itself. It really is a very short sighted policy which regulates the affairs of the great Theatres, as they are called. Mr. Young and Mr. Keen are engaged at expensive salaries, and their Managers not satisfied with the assurances that genius such as theirs must ever receive the countenance and support of all the enlightened members of the community, thrust them upon the public notice by all those artifices and tricks which are employed by keepers of rare animals, to gull and arrest the public attention, yet permit the novelty of the abilities of those actors to subside and wear away in contemptible representations, in which they are themselves but secondary considerations: and consequently diminish the effect produced when those actors assume characters consistent with their situations and their talents. And that the public in this, as in most other respects, is but a mixture and an accumulated mass of those passions, feelings, virtues, and ideas, which reign in its epitome, man. John Kemble, whose splendid talents were oft pourtrayed to empty benches, should be to managers a proof founded on experience.

We in a former number (criticising the entertainments which were last night produced) stated, that making comparative observations on the Houses, we felt inclined to cease our complaints against the Managers: but, though it is true the public taste has overthrown the bounds of sense and of propriety, and rushed into channels the most puerile and mean, it would be more consistent and dignified in the Managers, as directors of the opinions of the multitude, as men of education and of taste, and as distinguished private members of society, to sacrifice the possibility of present interest, to the certainty of future benefit, and curb, not encourage, the childish dispositions of their proselytes.

Sit mihi fas audita loqui.—VIRGIL.—We understand that in consequence of some severe reflections in the John Bull paper, upon Mr. CONWAY, a late member of the Haymarket Theatre; that gentleman accosted Mr. THEODORE HOOK, (the supposed Editor of that print) behind the scenes, and asked him if he was the author of those remarks? Mr. H. replied, that he did not conceive Mr. Conway entitled to demand that question—rather high words ensued, when Mr. Hook declared upon his honor that he had nothing to do with the paper. “Mr. C. answered, that whoever was the author of the article in question, he was a villain, a scoundrel, and a liar.—Here the affair ended.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE understand that Shakespeare's comedy of The Two Gentlemen of Verona is in rehearsal at this Theatre, and will be speedily produced, sustained by the chief talents of the Company, and interspersed with music, principally the composition of Mr. Bishop. The least exertion on the part of the Managers to revive the respectability of the Stage, we hail and will support with pleasure. Towards either of the Establishments or of their Directors, we have no feelings save those of partiality;—and though it is a duty which we owe to our readers, (devoted as this work is to the sole purpose of theatrical censorship) to strenuously oppose the torrent of depraved taste which now overflows the Drama, and hold up to public censure the causes which create it, we sincerely wish both the Theatres every prosperity and success, founded on legitimate means; and will lend all the aid which the reliance of our numerous readers on our judgment and integrity empowers us to give towards the promotion of those effects. We feel we should ill deserve the public credit, and our self-respect, were we to permit the contemptible ideas of that profit which was founded on an abuse and illiberal exercise of privileges, to sully the pages of our Histrionic annals.

A new Farce, called The Venison Pasty, (the production of Mr. Beazely) was on Saturday night presented at this Theatre, and most properly received an unequivocal condemnation from the audience. The hisses commenced about the conclusion of the first act, and continued so loud and general throughout the second, that little was heard of it, yet that little confirmed the general opinion of its being one of the worst attempts ever brought into public notice. The plot was insipid, the dialogue prosing and dull, the humour (if so it may be called) highly gross and indelicate.—A married gentleman running after all the women—his wife philosophically reasoning with him upon the license possessed by men, and unfairly debarred her sex,—a servant schooling his master, and a Gardener entering into terms respecting the seduction of his intended bride—an ill managed denouement a la Figaro!—but it is useless to dwell longer upon this contemptible and absurd production: though we really think that a little consideration for the good sense of an audience should have been entertained ere such a thing was offered to the public. At the fall of the curtain Mr. Fawcett was loudly called for; Mr. Jones appeared, and stated th at The Blind

Boy would be performed on Monday; this either was not heard or disregarded, and the disturbance continued till Mr. Fawcett appeared, who said, that, ever willing to bend to the wishes and decisions of the public, he had deputed Mr. Jones to announce another piece for Monday evening.

The House was very full.

DRURY LANE.

In our Saturday's paper we remarked on the sudden withdrawing of Mr. MUNDEN's name from any performance; and yet the Bill of the Play of that day announced him as Post Obit in Folly as it Flies for the same evening, instead of Mr. ELLISTON, &c. in Maid or Wife? To account for this, it is necessary to inform our readers that we are generally obliged to write our remarks previous to seeing the Bills of the Play; for the policy of the Managers of this Theatre has been to prevent our obtaining their Play-bill, until as late an hour as possible. The Bills are farmed to Mr. RODWELL, the Box-book-keeper, for £200 per annum; and we, feeling the importance of having the Theatrical intelligence at an early hour, made an offer to that gentleman of paying him £50 per annum for one of his bills, to be delivered to us daily, when printed, which is a few hours before their general publication:—but we met with an absolute refusal of this accommodation, which thus frequently obliges us to write and print our critiques before the Play-bills are issued.

Mr. RUSSELL played Tom Tick in Folly as it Flies on Saturday night. We cannot speak in favorable terms of his representation of this half-drawn character.

Mr. MUNDEN's Post Obit is very amusing—he and Mr. HARLEY as Doctor Infallible engrossed the chief humour in the piece.

Mrs. ORGER played Georgiana instead of Miss SMITHSON, for some good reason no doubt.

After the Coronation, (in which REGENT COOPER, went through the ceremonies,) the farce of Hit or Miss was performed, and introduced to our notice on this stage, MR. FITZWILLIAM, (from one of the Minor Theatres) in the character of O'Rourke O'Daisy. This gentleman is not an Irish Giant—nay we doubt whether he has a drop of Irish blood in his veins: at all events we are quite sure has not got an Irish tongue. We remember Jack Johnston too well, not to be a little fastidious about representatives of tight boys from dear Erin. But if we had never seen this Prince of Paddies, we should have been able to decide on the merits of Mr. Fitzwilliam as an Irish Country lad. He, in fact, entirely failed to elicit a single spark of Hibernian humour. He sings with a neat enough voice, as a cockney might say, but the manly, rich, comic tones of a genuine Pat, are not to be found in him. There are other characters in the world besides those of Irishmen, and in some of them Mr. Fitzwilliam may be useful and agreeable.

The House was not very well attended.

DRURY LANE.

LAST night, the first appearance, this season, of Mr. KEAN, drew a numerous and elegant assemblage to witness his Duke of Glo'ster. At an early hour the Pit-doors were besieged, and when they were opened, that part of the House speedily overflowed. Glo'ster is Mr. Kean's chef d'œuvre,—and on the present occasion, (which certain trans-atlantic reasons made peculiarly interesting) he outdid his former exertions in this most arduous character. But if we have to thank the prejudices of a tasteless American audience for any additional energy put forth by this great actor, we at the same time must record our feeling of its being undemanded by circumstances. Great has been the pleasure we have before received from his histrionic talents; and greater still our delight last night at their brilliant display. Mr. Kean's performances have the peculiar merit of triumphing over every physical disability of voice and figure.—His success is the victory of the mind. He may lose many points of advantage by being unable to thunder harmoniously in our ear, or to tread like a giant on the stage, but he does infinitely more than these can effect, by his extraordinary powers of satisfying the judgment and elevating the imagination. It is the uninformed, the tasteless, and the vulgar, who alone dwell on the hoarseness that ensues from his high-pitched declamation, and on his moderate stature for the personifier of heroes. But let them rather reflect on the wonderful force of passion and of sentiment he can convey with rapid effect, or deep deliberate aim. To minds open to intellectual beauties, there are endless opportunities afforded by Mr. Kean's acting for the highest gratification. In Glo'ster he unfolds his ambition—he unmasks his heart—he wheedles—stimulates—satirizes—contemns—hates—and murders—with a look, a movement, and a word, expressive beyond description. In our limited space it is impossible to point out particularly the numberless excellences he exhibited. He was rapturously welcomed, and applauded throughout.

Mr. PENLEY, who is re-engaged at this Theatre, made his first appearance as Buckingham, which he represented in a spiritless manner. This gentleman makes a tolerable fop, but for any other part we do not think him highly qualified.

Mr. COOPER's Richmond reminded us of the days of brass and steel accoutrement—his very voice partook of the sounds of the armourer's hammer.

The whole performance of this Tragedy does great credit to the Managers, and with some exceptions to the other representatives of it.

After Richard the Third, the musical Farce of The Adopted Child was acted, and a Mr. LOVEDAY (from the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh) made his first appearance on this Stage as Michael. His person is good, and his voice manly—his judgment excellent—his feeling correct—in short he gave the best possible effect to the honest warm-hearted fisherman. He was greeted throughout the piece by the audience in the most flattering manner, and so completely established himself in their favour, that the whole Pit rose towards the conclusion and cheered him with much enthusiasm. Mr. Loveday is a great acquisition to this Theatre: and, we think, well calculated for such a line as is filled by Mr. EMERY of Covent Garden, excepting Yorkshire characters, respecting which we have yet to learn the former gentleman's qualifications.

Mrs. BLAND and Miss POVEY sang divinely, the former was honored in her song at the end of the first Act.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Twelfth Night is announced, and The Two Gentlemen of Verona; promised, we shall therefore merely notify to our readers that The Eagle and The Blind Boy were last night repeated,—the latter repetition, we suppose arose from the unexpected situation into which the arrangements of the Theatre were thrown, by the condemnation of The Venus a Pasty. We trust that Saturday evening not only convinced the Managers of their error in entertaining so contemptible an opinion of the general taste of their audiences, as to suppose that any production, (no matter how absurd) would be easily received and encouraged by their good-nature, but proved that some latent sparks of genuine feeling and sense are still in existence. We hope to see them burst forth on all such occasions.

The House was well attended

DRURY LANE.

A NEW Comedy, in Three Acts, was produced here last night, under the title of LOST LIFE, and was favorably received.

The Characters were represented thus:

|                                        |                     |

| Daffodil.....                          | Mr. Horley.         |
| Captain Freshwater.....                | Mr. Penley.         |
| Doldrum.....                           | Mr. Knight.         |
| Smirke.....                            | Mr. W. H. Williams. |
| Bunyan.....                            | Mr. Meredith.       |
| Barrington Coventry.....               | Mr. Thompson.       |
| Executor of the late Mr. Pilgrim.....  | Mr. Foote.          |
| Mrs. Cozener.....                      | Mrs. Harlowe.       |
| Eliza (her niece).....                 | Mrs. Edwin.         |
| Emma .....                             | Miss Smithson.      |

The Plot is as follows.

A Mr. Pilgrim having died possessed of a large estate, called Crumble-stone Hall, left it to Emma, his only child, the fruit of a private marriage. The necessary proofs, however, of this marriage being wanting, the property would have devolved on the testator's brother, Solomon Pilgrim, who had long been travelling abroad, but intelligence was received of his death, and so the right became vested in a nephew named Featherbrain, who had been previously attached to Emma.

In this state of things the business of the scene commences; and displays at Bognor Rocks.—Mr. Featherbrain, and two acquaintances, Capt. Freshwater, and Daffodil a London shop-keeping poet, engaged in spending in gaiety their time and money. There are also in the neighbourhood, two strange old fellows, who, under the names of Morality and Double reside together in a secluded spot. Likewise there are two lady-adventurers from Cranbourne Alley, Mrs. Cozener, and her niece Eliza, who have visited this fashionable sea-bathing place to endeavor to hook a rich husband for the latter; and finally, the fair despoiled Emma is sojourning in a cottage in the vicinity, where Featherbrain occasionally sees her. The parties thus congregated, are made to act on each other's views in a whimsical manner. The female tricksters practise their arts on the young men, during which Featherbrain abandons honorable views regarding Emma, to secure the supposed brilliant fashionist from London; but the fair deceivers being at length caught in their own snare, he returns to his injured Emma. Old Morality, as he is called, (who is no other than Solomon Pilgrim), in the meantime having heard of the death of his brother, and feeling no longer inclined to hide himself from the world to gratify his broodings over an unfortunate early attachment, comes forth to observe his nephew Featherbrain's conduct; and at length resolves to punish him for his dissipated habits, declare his true name, and recover his Lost Life and the property thus abused. Many obstacles, and many mistakes now ensue from the arrival of Mr. Daffodil's father's traveller old Bunyan, in order to bring the cockney Poet back to his anti-Parnassian duties in the Shop: and from the arrival of a swindler called Barrington Coventry, who has found a manuscript of Mr Solomon Pilgrim's, which furnishes him with the history of that supposed lost gentleman. and, therefore, as he thinks, with the means of personating Solomon and obtaining Crumble-stone-Hall. But Solomon in the interim discovers Emma to be his brother's daughter, and consequently the rightful owner of the estate. This news spreads, and Miss Eliza of Cranbourne Alley, contrives to win the swindling Barrington Coventry for a husband under the supposition that he is the heir, whilst the black-leg believes her to be the heiress. Thus moral justice is so far done—and the rest of the piece is occupied in the usual unwindings, apologies, pardonings, and general happiness of those that may merit it.

The Comedy has not a spark of wit—of humour it occasionally partakes—but of sentiment it is crammed to the very choking.

We have no space to say more of it at present. On Thursday next it is to be repeated, when we may add to our remarks.

The House was tolerably well attended.

COVENT GARDEN.

Last night, the Twelfth Night, was performed at this Theatre, and did infinite credit in every respect to the taste of the Managers, and exertions of the Performers.

Miss Tree, who was announced as having recovered from a severe illness made her first appearance this season: she was most rapturously received, yet evidently laboured through the character with pain, though her singing and acting were in some parts effective. In the fifth Act, after attempting the song of "Bid me discourse," she was obliged to retire, and Mr. Abbott came forward and stated, that from the agitation attendant on a first appearance after so long an illness, Miss Tree was unable to proceed. An unexpected debut in the person of a black Cat took place.

The Marquis of Londonderry, and Prince Esterhazy were in the Theatre, the former was recognised after the Play.

COVENT GARDEN.

So great and general was the feeling of delight excited in the audience on Thursday, by the representation of The Twelfth Night, that when at its conclusion Mr. Abbott advanced to announce for last evening's performance, The Exile, &c., we shrunk as from the envious prototype of Discord, tempting our follies with his golden fruit; (apologizing for the license we take with the sex). The excellence of the acting, the sweetness of the music, the rich humour of the play, and the extreme delight of the auditors, all induced us to cherish the fond hope, that the rays of classic taste and pleasure were beaming forth again dispelling, like Aurora's smile, the envious veil of darkness.

The Exile went off last night in the manner it usually does; nor do the principal actors in The Coronation appear to have lost in the repetition of their efforts that portion of the public notice which their unrivalled assumptions of greatness of character entitle them to command. We are highly amused each night of the representation of this piece with the burst with which John Bull vents his national feelings, in greeting the mock representative of his country. There is something in this to an Englishman pleasing,—to a philosopher, or a severe observer of mankind, absurd; yet without entering into any moral disquisition on such a subject, we confess that as men we feel gratified at witnessing the expression of a happy feeling in the lower classes of society, (although excited probably at the expence of reason) when it flows from that sentiment which is the birthright of patriotism, courage and honour, and the seat of all those associations connected with the softer domestic ties of man.

The Day after the Wedding followed the Opera, and was well performed. Mrs. CHATTERLEY, as Lady Elizabeth Freelove, and Mr. JONES, as Colonel Freelove, met with great applause.

Vol. II.

The House was excellently well attended.

The play of The Stranger is announced for this evening, and a Miss BAKEWELL makes her first appearance before a London audience in the character of Mrs. Haller; a part selected, we are told, more from the necessity of circumstances, than from the feeling of private inclination, so much for the Theatrical palliation of an acknowledgment of a certain portion of indelicacy or some such cause.—The lady in question is, we understand, of a respectable family in Yorkshire, and performed with considerable success in the Liverpool, Manchester, and other Theatres.

DRURY LANE.

WE are delighted at being able to record the performances of an evening chiefly devoted to the legitimate Drama, and that a numerous and brilliant assemblage were attracted by it, which proves the value still set on true genius.

OTHELLO was the play of last night—and Mr. KEAN the sable hero! We cannot say a word to those who witnessed this representation, that could elevate their admiration of this great and effective piece of acting: but to those who have not beheld it, we would fain describe the soldier-like bearing of the general—the doating love of the ardent husband—the restlessness of awakening jealousy—the whirlwind passion of the convinced dupe, which lulled for a moment by returning doubts and fondness, broke forth again but the more fiercely from the momentary calm, and burst at length with ruin on its wing—this we would paint if we could, but it is impossible.

There are however, some trifling points in which Mr. Kean, as we think, errs. His action although generally appropriate, has often a redundancy that weakens effect. Thus, he too frequently clasps his hands together, and holds them before him like an archer's bow; and as frequently puts them to his head, standing like an Atlas bearing the Globe. These and some other slight defects arising, perhaps, from the difficulty of varying the position, might we conceive be conquered by study. He was repeatedly cheered, and fell—we might almost say—into the very arms of fame.

Mr. COOPER's Iago was very ineffective.

Miss SMITHSON's Desdemona was highly interesting.

Jaid or Wife? followed the Tragedy, and on Mr. ELLESTON's appearing after his late indisposition, he was warmly greeted.

The Duke of Wellington was in a private box, and, on his being recognised, was loudly clapped from the Pit.

LOST LIFE.

THE new Comedy of Lost Life was performed for the second time, to a good House. We gave the plot in our paper of Wednesday, and remarked that it contained no wit, some small portion of humour, and much sentiment. It is a piece that will have its short day, and be heard of no more. We greatly regret, however, to see Mr. MUNDEN's comic talent so completely lost. He seldom appears in anything to which he does not communicate life; but in this play he only puts us in mind of the temporary death of his smiling genius.

MR. LOVEDAY.

This gentleman we mentioned in our Tuesday's paper, made a most successful debut as Michael, in The Adopted Child. What we said in praise of him was borne out by the enthusiastic applause of the audience, who cheered him at the conclusion with cries of "bravo" and waving of hats. Yet, strange to say, not one word has been said of him in the following bills of the play! Why is this?—Mr. FITZWILLIAM, who made a first appearance here a few evenings before, as O'Rourke O'Daisy, in Hit or Miss, and who was not nearly so well received, and who most undoubtedly was, (as respects the characters each appeared in) not so deserving as Mr. Loveday of public favour, Mr. Fitzwilliam, we say, was puffed off in the succeeding play-bills! We again demand—Why is this? Why is a gentleman who is evidently calculated to shine in a particular walk of his profession, which, at this Theatre, is not occupied by any one—why is he neglected after the public voice has stamped his merit in the most unequivocal manner? Of Mr. LOVEDAY, in a private capacity, we know nothing—we never saw or heard of him until his debut—but it is alone a sense of justice towards an individual, and a feeling of what is due to that numerous audience, which on all sides cheered his performance, that induce us to draw attention to the question we have put.

MR. KEAN'S GLOSTER.

This Evening affords another opportunity of enjoying the most striking performance the British Stage can boast of. We suggest to our readers who intend to witness Mr. Kean's personation of the arduous character of Gloster, to read the Play of Richard the Third, before they go to the Theatre, and closely remark the ruling passion of ambition—the remorseless heart—the deep hypocrisy—the satirical malignity of the monster's nature: then, to note in the performer of the bloody Richard, not the volume or harmony of voice, but the embodying of those characteristics through action, look, and intonation.

---

COVENT GARDEN.

The Play of The Stranger, with Mr. YOUNG as the Stranger, and Miss BAKEWELL's debut here in Mrs. Haller, drew a very numerous and elegant audience, last night.

Mr. Young's representation of the Misanthrope was most feeling and energetic. Of Miss Bakewell's performance we have to say, she understands the part, but a monotonous piano voice renders her delineation far from agreeable. Her figure is good, but her features have nothing striking in them. She evidently had many friends in the house; and throughout, and at the conclusion, met with applause.

On the announcement of The Exile for this Evening—a call was made from the Pit for the repetition of The Stranger; and during the first act of The Barber of Seville, the clamour continued until Mr. FAWCETT appeared, and enquired the pleasure of the audience. "The Exile" was shouted on one side—" The Stranger" on the other. Mr. Fawcett retired during the contest, but quickly returned and said, that if it was the desire of the audience, The Stranger should be repeated. The ayes appeared to carry it, and Mr. Fawcett withdrew.

✍ Since writing the above we have received the Covent Garden Play Bill, and find the Manager has not complied with the presumed call for The Stranger, this evening, but for Thursday next.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN's Glo'ster attracted, as might be supposed, a numerous audience, last night.

We have noticed this great effort on the last occasion of Richard the Third being performed here, and we have nothing to add in the way of critical remark, except that we thought Mr. Kean appeared occasionally languid about the middle of the play, but he became towards its conclusion animated with all the wonted fire he casts into his martial action. In the tent scene, as usual, he made a terrific impression, and his superstitious alarm on the sudden entrance of Catesby, and his turn of attempted collectedness on perceiving who it was, produced well-deserved applause, which, indeed, was often bestowed on the several forcible points he exhibited, and, at his fall, was expressed in the most distinguished manner.

We greatly regret to see Mr. Kean so badly supported by the very indifferent Buckingham of Mr. PENLEY, who is just as well calculated for that part as any of the scene-shifters. The time was when we have seen Buckingham gain honors from the audience for Richard and himself—but now Richard almost seems to deserve contempt for leaning on such a weak prop; and only redeems his character for penetration, when he orders his head to be struck off.

Mrs. EGERTON played the widowed Queen of Edward the Fourth with much effect. We observed in the Boxes, many a Lady's bright eyes dimmed with the tears she occasioned.

Mr. COOPER gave the little that Richmond has to say with propriety and spirit; but the tone in which he concludes his sentences is very bad. During his combat with Richard he had his sword knocked out of his hand and thus would have appeared at his opponent's mercy contrary to the part, but Mr. Kean dexterously relieved him by dropping his own sword immediately on his perceiving it, and each resumed their weapons, and fought on to the death.

COVENT GARDEN.

It was generally supposed that the play of The Stranger would have been last night repeated, in consequence of the improper, and, under such circumstances, almost unprecedented vociferations of the noisy portion of the audience assembled to witness Miss Bakewell's representation of Mrs. Haller. Our limits yesterday afforded us merely the opportunity of noticing the circumstances, without comment:—but we do not think that such events should pass unnoticed. Miss B.'s performance we decidedly pronounce to have been not more than respectable: a disagreeable recital of the words, without the energies, shades, or beauties of the sense; and though we should be sorry to form too harsh an opinion from the injudicious exertions of her friends, yet we assure them that such measures are not likely to thrust an actress into public favour, when exerted against public opinion. The Managers, we feel in duty bound to say, behaved with that proper sentiment of respect for the judgment of the impartial portion of the audience, which became their stations and opinions, not to be biassed by the noisy turbulence of a silly set.

The Exile was last night performed at this House to rather a numerous audience, and elicited the applause usually bestowed upon it. The Poor Soldier followed.

It has been suggested to us that, to render the utility of this novel publication complete, a short essay on the entertainments to be represented on the evenings on which this work is published, besides the critiques and observations on those of the previous night's would not be useless, as by these means a general information might be gleaned by the visitors of the Theatres of the amusement they are to derive. The repetitions of pieces will not always enable us to conform to this plan, but when in our power, we shall avail ourselves of every opportunity of adding to the usefulness of a work which has already been so flatteringly received.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Saturday evening the Opera of Rob Roy was performed at this Theatre. Any dramatic attempt founded on an original so delightful as that from which this piece is taken, cannot fail of exciting on its representation a sentiment of gratification, allied to an easy identity of the characters, from the vivid impression which their first delineation created in the memory and feelings—as delight smiles doubly sweet, and recollection springs with agile step from the soft couch of dull repose, to greet the object fancy painted, when 'tomb'd within the cell of Morpheus. As far as regards Theatrical effect, this piece has been ably dramatised, and though much of the peculiar beauties and characteristic features of the leading individuals have been sacrificed and omitted, yet even their outlines, the music, the grand and picturesque scenery, the locality of the characters, the able delineation of the manners and habits which mark the Highland mountaineers,—the lively bursts of humour which blend harmoniously with the deep strains of feeling,—render this play a very superior one of the class in which it ranks. The hero was sustained by Mr. Yates, who owes much to the liberality of the audience in permitting him to go through the performance of a character so infinitely above the scope of his abilities. Rob Roy, though a distinguished character in the dramatic calendar, possesses not those shades of mental penciling which mark a Hamlet, an Othello, or even a Rolla, but the bold tints of rule colouring—of sentiments unschooled by stern philosophy—of feelings, modelled in the cast of nature, nor smoothed by the fashioning chissel of society. In portraying these qualities of the hero Mr. Yates entirely failed: he wanted feeling and energy, and though for an inferior Theatre it might be well, for Covent Garden he neither adequately looked, walked, talked, nor felt the character. We think it was injudicious of the Managers to place this gentleman in a situation so much above his talents to fill; though should they in their superior policy again thrust him upon the public, we would recommend to him an attentive re-perusal of the words of his part, for although he did not talk much to the purpose, he once or twice (in the last scene particularly) talked absolute nonsense. In the afterpiece he performed with much humour and vivacity, and was encored in his Mail Coach Song. Miss M. TROTT was the Dianna Vernon, and though in this character there is no great scope for the prominent talents which this lady possesses, as an actress, she supplied the deficiency by her singing. Mr. Liston was as unlike the Bailie Jarvie of the novel or play as he could well have been: buffoonery, but not acting, is this gentleman's forte. In the farce he was inimitable.

The House was not very well attended, owing, probably, to the weather.

DRURY LANE.

On Saturday Evening we had Maid or Wife?—The Coronation—and “By Special Desire” Giovanni in London.—Don Giovanni, by MADAME VESTRIS. No doubt, as respects the latter piece, it may be said, the “Special Desire” was the genuine result of good taste. If, however, we were to attempt to assert that it was a very bad taste that could be gratified by laying prostrate the chaste beauties of the Drama, for the purpose of enjoying a libertine spectacle, we might bring on our heads the gay Latharios, who have so long supported the merry but indelicate scenes, where a lovely female sacrifices the memory of her own sex to personate, in male attire, the freedoms of the other: but we care not—we are bold enough to declare our opinion, that although Madame Vestris is, certainly, a fascinating actress, we think her admirers should not so often compliment her with their “Special Desire”—particularly in such a character as Don Giovanni. We say her—because we are strongly impressed that it is the terrestrial lady, and not the heavenly muse of Mr. MONCRIEF that draws such distinguished honors on Giovanni in London. When we see Royal Arms extended over this piece, we naturally enquire.—Is this the species of patronage the British Stage is to expect from the illustrious members of Society, who by their public example can influence taste and correct feeling in a most extensive degree? We would, if we could, fain believe that a Managerial Buse has been played off on the public, by this frequent insinuation of a Royal Special Command, and that it means nothing more than to uphold a stale exhibition, but that we suspect is too bold a manœuvre for the most adventurous Manager, and we see too many reasons to convince us of the Royal favor thus bestowed.

MR. KEAN'S OHELLO.

This Evening Mr. KEAN repeats the part of Othello: It is one of his best personations, and, cannot fail again to attract a brilliant audience. There are such continual emanations of the most powerful genius breaking through the physical restraints he sometimes labours under, that the mind forgets every thing but the forcible delineation of the noble soldier—the tender husband—and at length furious dupe of the designing Iago.

COVENT GARDEN.

LAST night, The Exile and The Warlock of the Glen were performed at this House, the latter piece being substituted for The Blind Boy; a selection of entertainments but ill befitting the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, and the present enlightened age. From the system upon which the British Theatres are conducted (their interests and arrangements being invested in the person, and dependant on the judgment of one or a few individuals) we must ever behold public taste as relative to dramatic exhibitions, vary as suits the dispositions or emoluments of a few private speculators; and we are afraid that too little of the Greek and Roman virtue inspires the modern inmates of this polished world to stedfastly adhere to any policy which takes its purity from the springs of public welfare, when it assumes the prospect of affecting private interest. This will, perhaps, find its shelter beneath the general weakness of mankind, and the first sentiments which guides their actions—self; but though in the private and individual intercourse of society such a feeling may exist with impunity, to prevent its exertion in a situation which bears an important relation to the morals, habits, and actions of mankind, should become the consideration of the legislator. The stage in its early state (particularly the Athenian) was as materially the vehicle for the conveyance of public sentiment, satire, and censure, as is the press in the present period; and though in reference to its now political connexion with mankind, it is sufficiently at the discretion of the high authorities, yet as it affects morality, and the cultivation of pure taste and genius, it is as neglected, as though its sole objects were the amusement of our senses, and not our intellects. The principles upon which the Theatres in Paris are conducted, are much more conducive to the higher interests of the Drama, and the gratification of its enlightened admirers; (and without arbitrarily depriving the lower classes of those enjoyments befitting their comprehension and humour,) than are those of our British Temples of amusement: nor will dramatic literature and taste assume their native purity, 'till the Stage be conducted on its first principles of high relation to society.

The House was respectably attended, but very noisy on account of the change of performance.

Vol. II.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN, last night, appeared for the second time this Season as Othello.

He had evidently bestowed much attention in the study of the part since he last performed it, and not uselessly, for there was a deeper tone of feeling chastened by a just idea of the sentiment of the character which pervaded this representation, and that gave a new charm to many passages, His action also was more repressed, and better regulated than on the previous night, and the result of the whole was an increased effect on the audience, who testified their approbation from every part of the Theatre.

Mr. COOPER's Iago, is greatly wanting in the necessary points towards conveying a due impression of the most excellent villain. He does not adequately display by tone or feature, the deep designing of his soul; nor in his bye-play heighten the idea of the malice and treachery he is brooding over. Perhaps, it may be said, that it is the essence of good acting in this part to make Iago appear what he is not: but, although this is true as relates to the deceiving of Othello, yet, the audience are always to be made a party in the villain's thoughts, and it is, therefore, necessary for the performer never to lose sight of those opportunities which enable him to strongly mark the workings of his breast, and thus bear with him their constant recognition of those baneful attributes which it is his studied art to conceal from the Moor.

Mr. PENLEY's Cassio is not amiss. Mr. RUSSELL's Roderigo very so-so. Mr. BROMLEY is very correct in Ludovico; as, indeed, he is in all that he undertakes.

It is very satisfactory to observe the rising merit of the amiable Miss SMITHSON, who as Desdemona gave a faithful, pleasing, and impressive portraiture of the hapless lady.

Mrs. EGERTON, as Emilia is quite at home—the strong expression of a decided character is her forte—and she drew much applause from the energy she displayed.

We think OTHELLO worthy of another repetition if a better Iago existed at this theatre; but, as there is no one here that can fill that part with any effect, we would recommend the play to be laid aside until some genius shall appear that can relieve Mr. Kean from having the burthen of attraction entirely cast on him.

In the farce of Hit or Miss which followed the tragedy, Mr. FITZ-WILLIAM appeared for the second time here as O'Rourke O'Daisy, and went pleasantly through the part with good applause; but he would have some difficulty in convincing us that he imported his brogue from Ireland.

Mrs. BLAND, sang with her accustomed sweetness, and was much applauded.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE play of Hamlet was last night acted at this Theatre, and, as the bills announced, " by express desire ;" but which we should rather suppose to have proceeded from the frequenters of the Pit, than of the Boxes, as in the early part of the evening the former was very full, whilst the latter presented but a chilling aspect of emptiness. The Tragedy of Hamlet is, perhaps, one of the ablest productions which flowed from the pen of Shakspeare; the harmony and similitude of character is so beautifully and faithfully adhered to, and tho' the leading one may have been formed in the mould of inconsistency, Hamlet is throughout consistent with himself. To pourtray men, not Gods, is the duty of the dramatic writer, and though the outline of the Danish Prince may be subject to criticism, the shades with which it is filled up, and the unity completed, defies that task, for 'tis in harmony with truth itself. Mr. YOUNG seemed to exert himself, we thought, last night, with more than usual energy, and in many parts his delineations were very fine and impressive. The advice to the players was given in a natural and forcible manner, eliciting considerable applause. Yet (though this gentleman appeared to greater advantage in the character last night, than on any past occasion) there is too often in his manner a dull prosing apathy, which ill accords with the impetuous, ardent, suspicious and romantic Hamlet. Nor do we think that two points in his acting were either consistent with the character, or Mr. YOUNG's general conception. On the entrance to him of Guildestern and Rosencrantz (two of his earliest acquaintances and friends) after saluting them, he assumes a theatrical position several paces above them on the stage, and questions them in a dictatorial strain, rather becoming a Judge, than as companions of his early youth, and of whom he had much talked. Again, after describing to them in an emphatic, though calm, manner, the condition of his mind, and the appearance which " the o'er hanging firmament, and majestical roof" to him presented, he burst into a fit of heroicks (not admiration) on that piece of work, " man," and ended with a pettish sneer at the smile of Rosencrantz. Upon the whole, we think it a very inferior piece of acting to Mr. CHARLES KEMBLE'S. Mr. BLANCHARD, as Polonius, was excellent, If Mr. CHAPMAN was to act less, he would be more tolerated as an actor. Miss TREE played and sang the airs in Ophelia with great feeling and sweetness. The House at half price was very well attended.

Vol. II.

Connected as we are in our public capacities, with every circumstance relative to the Drama, or its votaries, we feel a pleasure in giving publicity to a circumstance, which while it speaks for the amiableness of the individual of whom it is related, throws a gleam of sunshine on the profession of which she is a distinguished member. Miss Stephens when in Liverpool, went to the Blind Asylum, the poor inmates of which, understanding the name of their visitor, distantly expressed an ardent desire to hear the voice of one who had excited such general admiration. immediately upon understanding this, clapped with that good feeling which has often marked her actions, sang with Mr. G. Smith a duetto: and though her return of praises did not resound from the lips of fashion or of taste, they were uttered from the hearts of poverty and thankfulness.

DRURY LANE.

Yesterday evening Maid or Wife? and The Coronation, were followed by the Extravaganza called Giovanni in London, which introduced on this stage Miss BLAKE (the late Haymarket Macheath) as the gay Don.

After the eminent success of Madame VESTRIS in this disgusting, stupid character, for any young lady to attempt it who had not good reason for building her hopes, in a great degree, on personal attractions, is truly adventurous. Every thing depends on the little winning arts, and natural graces of the female who represents the libertine Giovanni; and the woman that can best forget her own sex to assume the freedoms of the other, is the most proper to fill the part, when a man cannot be found to enact it. The Piece itself is a low attempt at satire, calculated only to raise a laugh in the vulgar assemblage at a Minor Theatre, or amongst the same description in the galleries of the Great Theatres: and it holds out nothing in the musical department but tunes that our ears have been long familiar with, and which are injured and degraded by the Grub-street parodies attached to them: Giovanni's songs, particularly, require great vivacity and dexterity; and there is no one at present on the stage that can so well bestow those saving qualities on these perversions of harmony, as Madame Vestris, whose face and figure also add their powerful aid to maintain this effective abuse of delightful music.

Miss BLAKE, coming after such an attractive Giovanni, had much to contend with, yet she cannot be said to have utterly failed to please, although she was far from making a deep impression. Her voice is of a very different quality from that of her predecessor—she has some good under-tones, but her upper notes are weak and unmanageable. Instruction and experience may, however, make her a distinguished singer, and improve her acting, which is already very respectable. She met with frequent, but not very animated applause, except in "Merrily thy bosom boundeth," which was her only encore.

Mrs. BLAND was in excellent voice, and was encored in the air of Wapping Old Stairs. Miss CURTIS and Miss FOVEY also sung delightfully. The House was not full.

COVENT GARDEN.

The entertainments at this Theatre last night were The Exile and Brother and Sister: and we really blush for our national taste, when we announce to our readers, that notwithstanding the frequent repetitions of the former piece, the House in every part (not excepting the Boxes) was infinitely better attended than on the preceding night, when Hamlet and the Citizen were the objects of attraction. To behold the vulgar and lower classes of society enter into the full enjoyment of entertainments addressed only to the senses, does not surprise us, as a refined exertion of the mind and taste is not expected from their habits and understandings; but when we see individuals who by birth, education, fortune, and situation, are the umpires of national manners and taste, and by their example either exalt or degrade their patronise, and apparently enjoy a species of amusement both puerile and absurd, it well becomes an object of regret to the patriot—of contempt to the observer. In the very piece which is now so ardently run after, could its admirers but exert a trifling portion of that understanding which the possession of is so imperiously their boast, they would not only discover the most palpable inconsistencies, and gross absurdities, mashed up into language perfectly corresponding, but would almost despise themselves for permitting their understandings to be deceived by a nonsense and glitter more suited for the entertainment of children than of men. We are highly amused when we perceive the assemblages of Beaux and Belles who grace the Box circles, melting with sympathy, roused with delight, and warmly applauding the incidents and speeches of a play, in which, amidst innumerable greater inconsistencies, a young lady rushes into a group of villagers, implores their assistance for her old companion, who has "sunk with fatigue and has not tasted food for the last two days," and when the peasants are about to comply with her entreaties, she stops, and entertains them for about ten minutes (leaving the old gentleman to do his best) with a pathetic panegyric on her own fortitude. Can any one of our readers, who reflects for an instant on the subject, and can distinguish the difference betwixt absurdity and taste, think otherwise, than that the public feeling of the latter has degenerated into the former! Brother and Sister went off very well: Miss HALLANDE sang with very good taste. This Lady has a most powerful voice, possessing flexibility, but deficient of a refinement of cultivation which would render it always harmoniously pleasing to the ear. Mr. LISTON was very comic as Pacheco.

Miss BAKEWELL makes her second appearance this evening in the character of Mrs. Haller; and from the circumstances which took place on her début, we anticipate the probability of a distnbance.

DRURY LANE.

THE deep debt of gratitude which Mr. ELLISTON owes to Geraldi Daval, the Coronation, with walking sticks and horses, and Monsieur Tonson, induced him to again invite them last night to his boards. Company that may please some persons are often very objectionable to others; and we must confess that if romance-reading and show-loving, milliners and ladies'-maids, can be attracted by melodramas and gaudy pageants, we do not much desire to be of their party; but would rather take our seat in our comfortable arm-chair, and drop asleep in the hope of dreaming of those hours we have so delightfully passed in witnessing the estimable efforts of the Comic and the Tragic Muse. O Mr. MUNDEN! Mr. MUNDEN O! How we long to see the Bandits and noisy Show-men sent about their business, to make room for your genuine humour, and the comic powers of some of your worthy compeers! It is true, we are told we shall see you as Polonius on Friday next, but that is an evanescent treat, and beyond it we have no immediate prospect of enjoying your mirth-creating performances! For Thalib's sake, rush with this Paper in your hand into the Manager's Boudoir, and demand his attention to the wishes of the whole town. Often as we have been witnesses of your past exertions, we have but the greater desire that their future exhibitions may not be curtailed ere time steals them away for ever.

COVENT GARDEN.

MISS BAKEWELL last night made her second appearance before a London audience, and tho' we are happy to state, that our fears of a disturbance taking place were not realized, the general sentiments respecting this lady's debut were most pointedly expressed by the extreme wretchedness of the house. Previous to the half-price, we did not distinguish in the lower Boxes more than three ladies, and the intire number of persons in that circle would not have filled its first row of seats; the other divisions of the Theatre corresponded in emptiness with that we have just named; tho' the half-price brought with it the usual number of loungers and frequenters. So much for the exertions of inconsiderate friends! and tho' we think that after commanding, as we may say, a repetition of a play, they were bound in honour to the managers to support that night, yet this occurrence (by which the latter must have lost considerably) will teach them that their true policy is to adhere to sound judgment and good taste, nor be influenced by the bawlings of a foolish set: and also give a lesson to the friends of future "speculators," that the only foundation for success is talent, not turbulence and party force. Miss BAKEWELL we pronounce to be decidedly incapable of supporting the first line of characters in Covent Garden, and if her first and second appearances are any fair criterions of her abilities, we should say, that she wants judgment, feeling, and voice; the former (though often in error both as to sense and pronunciation) she made little display of; feeling there was none; and as to voice, it is the most unpleasant, squeaking, sing-song, monotonous one, we ever remember hearing. The other characters in the play were very well supported. Mr. MEADOWS was excellent in Peter, and received considerable applause. Mr. EGERTON, tho' a useful actor, is sometimes worse than bad; in the scene immediately following the discovery between the Stranger and his wife, Steinfort, with all the feelings of disappointed hope, generosity, regard for his friend, and delicacy towards Mrs. Haller, tenders his services to effect a reconciliation; but Mr. E. "so bellowed and strutted, that we should have thought some of "nature's journeymen," &c. The Libertine followed the Stranger. Miss M. TREE was very warmly received, and her first duet encored. Both she and Mr. DEKUSER sustained their characters with much force and humour. What is the reason that the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, cannot assign the part of Leporello to a person who is qualified to sustain the musical, as well as the acting part of the character! A very fine song was left out by Mr. MEADOWS, and a delightful piece of music miserably mangled by his ignorance of the science; besides the character itself being very ill sustained. It must either arise from bad taste, or poverty, though a London audience should not be thus trifled with. The feeling at the conclusion of the play was very much divided. The afterpiece was, generally speaking, very ill produced.

DRURY LANE.

This evening Hamlet is to be represented here with a sufficiently strong cast of the dramatis personæ.

It is not our duty, at present, to touch on the manner in which, from our general acquaintance with the talents of the performers, we might presume the Tragedy will be acted; but we may, with some advantage, perhaps, to those who intend to witness the representation of this Play, and have not recently seen or read it, speak of the character and supposed attributes of Hamlet according to the author's conception.

The Prince of Denmark, as drawn by Shakspeare, is a very young man, endowed by nature with a noble and generous spirit; with a mind highly cultivated; a heart open to tender impressions; with manners formed in the most polite school; and with a person elegant and prepossessing.

Such is Hamlet at the commencement of the Play—but when the tale of horror is narrated by his Father's Spirit, it breaks down the even tenour of his life and thoughts; and whilst it leaves him capable of wisely and steadily plotting the detection and punishment of the murderous King, and of forcibly torturing the feelings of his guilty mother, yet so destroys all other method in his habits and affections—so changes his views of mankind, and strangely alters his bearing to all around him, that madness is the only name to be given to his general actions.

Shakspeare has, with wonderful genius, combined in this character the greatest apparent inconsistencies, and yet gives to it one governing impulse, that preserves the seeming unity of its structure.

Hamlet may be accounted a madman, from particular acts, by the persons of the Drama who move about him, and are ignorant of the dreadful secret imparted to him from the grave, but to the reader or spectator, it is evident his aberrations proceed from the temporary distraction of his thoughts, and the festering wound of suffering filial love, rather than from a settled loss of well-guided intellect. The admirable skill of the author is seen in the manner in which he causes Hamlet's original character and habitual conduct, to shine out through the obscurities his reason sometimes labours under, from the memory of the horrid detail of his father's murder; and through the blackening clouds of thought, maturing the proof of the deed and a just revenge.

COVENT GARDEN.

For the last time but one, (as the bills announced) The Exile was performed at this Theatre yesterday evening: and we are free to confess that we most sincerely rejoice at this prospect of a termination of so lengthened a career of bad taste, not only in the hope that the superior enjoyments which are to succeed it, will wean the public mind from the puerile infatuation by which 'tis now engrossed, but as it will afford a relief to our personal convenience, and increase the interest of our novel publication. We feel it a duty we owe to the political world, to announce to it, through the medium of our readers, the circumstance of a change having taken place in the Russian ministry, in a character of no less importance than the Chancellor. We confess that there is a degree of mystery attached to this affair the greatest secrecy having been observed; but our private opinion is (from the consumptive looks of the deceased) that either slow poison or a decline bore him to his ancestors, though from the rotundity of figure which marks his successor, we think it very probable that a vacancy will shortly occur, occasioned by a fit of apoplexy.

As further intelligence to our readers, we beg to announce that the Grand Master and Chapter of the order of Malta, upon mature deliberation, have voted a supply of new cloaks to their representatives at the Court of Russia; those lately in use, having (after a minute investigation by a committee of the order, and strict examination of the principal knights of buckram attached to that ancient fraternity) been deemed unworthy of further use, though consigned to the care of the master tailor, with the discretionary power of reviving their use on any future occasion.

The House was very full, and the delight created by the entertainment appeared to be very general,

Vol. II.

DRURY LANE.

The performance of Hamlet, at this theatre, last night, drew a numerous and elegant audience to witness Mr. KEAN's representation of the Prince of Denmark.

In our last number we gave a sketch of the characteristics of Hamlet; and it is but justice towards Mr. Kean, to say that he made them as prominent as Shakespeare himself could have wished. If Mr. Youne, who played this character at Covent Garden on Wednesday evening, surpasses Mr. Kean in power of voice—if Mr. C. Kemble has the advantage of him in person, still he can meet them on the ground of intellectual force, and would carry off the prize of public applause. Nothing can be more just than his conception, and more effective than the animation of its 'delivery. His first meeting with his Father's Ghost—his taunting of Rosencrantz and Guildestern—his dialogue with Polonius—the soliloquy "To be or not to be, &c"—the interview with Ophelia—his instruction to the actors—the scene of the Play—the rebuking of his mother—in short every part that admitted of powerful effect, was managed by Mr. Kean with a truth and force of enunciation and action that drew down from all parts of the house the loudest applause. It is evident he has lately re-studied the part and thereby elicited new beauties in his style, and given to the whole a consistent excellence, that places this character amongst his very best histrionic efforts.

Mr. Cooper makes the most admirable Ghost we ever had the pleasure to meet with. No Ghost ever had the benefit of such a pair of lungs. His sepulchral tones were so much approved of by the audience, as to occasion a round of applause. This is the first Ghost we ever remember to have been so flatteringly received.

Mr. Munden's Polonius was excellent.

The Ophelia of Miss Kelly drew tears from many—the best tribute to the admirable manner in which she acted the mad scene: but she had other proof of the feeling of the audience in their warm plaudits.

The other characters were in some respects well sustained, and HARLEY's Grave-digger was particularly good. The Tragedy went off with the pointed satisfaction of the audience, and should be repeated.

DRURY LANE.

WE take the opportunity of the want of novelty at this House on Saturday evening, to notice the malignant remarks on the acting of Mr. KEAN, by "THE HUMBURG" Gazette, entitled JOHN BULL. This Paper has adopted a plan for obtaining circulation which is most diabolical. It exists on the plunder of private, as well as public character, and never sallies forth without arming itself with the sharpest and most cowardly weapons that can wound the feelings of its victims. It is always easy to discover when criticism flows from a pure source, and is not tainted with personal hatred, or by the cunning policy of attractive severity: the observations of the last two numbers of the John Bull Paper, shew this in the strongest manner. The hireling writer of the theatrical articles, be he who he may, is as infamous a traducer as the wretch who pens or directs the general subject-matter of that disgrace of the British Press—for when he states that "Mr. KEAN has not mind nor intelligence enough to understand his author"—that his "Othello is the consummation of absurdity"—that "his acting is a tissue of humbug"—that "he deserves to be hooted"—he lies, and with all the consciousness of falsehood about him.

But this worthy critic is not satisfied with thus belabouring Mr. Kean, but attacks Miss KELLY, who, he says, most "unhappily married Ophelia,"—when it was the common feeling and observation of every individual whom we saw or heard express an opinion of her acting the character on last Friday evening, that it was a most admirable effort of the kind. There are numerous other instances of wanton attack against merit by this abandoned writer, who may properly be a public slanderer, if he be a public plunderer.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE have to announce to our readers for the last time, by "Special Desire," (as the bills promise,) the repetition of the Exile and all its attending pageantry, on to-morrow evening. We will not lessen the gratification which this event and its announced effects afford us, by any gloomy anticipations of returning ill; but after a weary pilgrimage through a deserts' waste, we'll moisten our parched lips in a delicious clear stream, and stretch beneath the palm's refreshing shade, with not a sentiment but hope towards what's beyond. Virginus is the cutainment of this evening, the Two Gentlemen of Verona the promised one of Thursday; and these pieces (in which all that can gratify the eye, the ear, and the understanding, have been combined) will receive, we trust, a liberal support, not only as their due,—but as an encouragement for the continuation of similar productions; and by opening the mind to the enjoyment of superior sources of delight, teach it to bestow a due proportion of estimation on a style of amusement whose only tendency is the inflation of the imagination.

Vol. II.

It may be advanced by some, that the stage is not an object of political, or even moral importance, but is merely the great vehicle for public amusement: this we deny, not only upon the faith of historical references, but upon principles deduced from observation and from reason. Our limits prevent us entering more fully into this, tho' we shall avail ourselves of the first opportunity of resuming the topic. But even admitting (in respect of its reference to our former subject) this false principle to be just, it is surely the interest of the managers not only to desire the existence of the contrary opinion, but to promote its general belief, for on it is built their respectability and support. "Vincit amor patria." Virg. Mr. Knowles' tragedy of Virginus is this evening performed, and Mr. MACREADY resumes his theatrical duties. The impression which this gentleman created in the character of Virginus was of a most powerful nature, and the dreadful pause between the resolution, and the act of plunging the knife into his daughter's breast, is still alive within our memories. But with this play we must ever associate the recollection of Mr. C. KEMBLE'S Scyllus.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. G.—is thanked for the communication of his good wishes.

The EDITORS thank Miss — for her note in reference to their circulars. They assure her that the polite apology for not subscribing to their publication, was unnecessary, as they are aware of the influence proceeding from a mistaken policy in the Manager of Drury Lane Theatre, in respect to the paper, Mr. ELLISTON having established a weak opposition to its increasing success. The Editors call this policy mistaken, because such a work, so perfectly novel in this metropolis, as The Theatrical Observer, has an effect in regard to fixing public attention on the Drama, and of giving merit its due weight, likely to lead to far more beneficial consequences to the Managers than the trifling profits they may lose by a reduced sale of their Play-bills, or from the servile criticisms of the hired agents of the Press:—Indeed the Managers of Covent Garden and the Haymarket Theatres, aware of this, have extended to the Editors of this Paper that facility of admission, which (Mr. Elliston has injudiciously withheld) and in the most handsome and ready manner, whilst the manager of Drury Lane Theatre, although addressed twice on the subject, has departed from the most common rule of good breeding in never replying to their letters. Notwithstanding this, they have not permitted their private feelings to interfere with their duty to the public; and refer their readers to all their remarks on Drury Lane Theatre, as proofs of their impartiality and independence as Censors of the Stage. With respect to the thanks Miss — conveys, the Editors beg to say, they do not feel entitled to claim them from any lay or gentleman of the profession, as they praise or censure without any view of calling up personal feelings. However, they may observe, that they never feel happier than when their slender need of praise is bestowed where private virtues are blended with public talents.

DRURY LANE.

THE entertainments here, last night, of Maid or Wife? The Coronation, and Giovanni in London, were well adapted for those who go to the Play without knowing or considering the nature of the performances. Our country cousins and foreign visitors to the metropolis, flock to the theatre because it is open; and because it enables the one set to tell their gaping rural associates, on their return home, what a mighty large fine place the London Play-house is—and furnishes the other party with a magnifique, superbe description for a page or two in their Journal de Voyage. With the aid of these two descriptions of persons, and their town friends, and the numerous domestics at present awaiting in idleness the return of their masters and mistresses, and who are inclined to spend some part of their board-wages on a seat in the Pit or Gallery, a tolerably large audience is drawn to the theatres, let the managers represent what they will. Still, however, there is a large and respectable class ready to attend them whenever sufficient taste and judgment are displayed in the selection of Dramas to be performed: and, therefore, a wise manager will always take care that his play-bills shall announce for some part of the evening's amusement, one piece, at least, adapted to that class. Yet, we have too often witnessed the neglect of the true supporters of the stage, whilst an opportunity occurred of attracting the casual mob without a single effort of genius. This, as a policy calculated to fill the house for a given time, may answer; but in the end must fail to produce permanent benefit from the averted habits of all rational people in respect to attending the theatres, where folly and noise have superseded good sense, wit, and humour. By perpetually offering something to satisfy the lovers of the genuine drama, they will remain with fixed attention and appetite for theatrical amusements, but every lapse of regard for their gratification, lets loose many from the very memory of the stage.

DE MONFORT.

This Tragedy, from the able pen of Miss BAILLIE, is to be produced to-night, with the last act considerably altered to heighten the effect. As the talents of the author, the character of the Play, and the long-devoted attention of Mr. KEAN to the getting it up in a powerful manner, are well known, expectation is naturally roused to a very extensive degree, and will undoubtedly be conspicuous this evening from the numerous assemblage in the house.

Vol. II.

COVENT GARDEN.

We experienced last night a rare treat in witnessing Mr. MACREADY'S delineation of Virginius. To enumerate its peculiar beauties would be an endless task, tho' the recollections it would revive would render it a pleasing one; yet still we think, that tho' the colouring of the prominent and bold features of the picture is exquisitely fine, it needs the lighter shading of the inferior parts to render it complete. Yet it portrays those master strokes of art, which make the mind and imagination bend to transcendent excellence incapable of exercising the dull task of criticism. The petulance at Lucius' tardy recital, the breathless anxiety when Virginius' name is uttered, the stupifying and unconnected ravings of the injured and fond Father, and the yell of perception which marked his discovery of the fell plot, all were given in the happiest manner, and drew from the audience the most enthusiastic applause.

Mr. ABBOTT'S Scipio was a very fair piece of acting; but this gentleman seems so little to feel his characters, and so commonly supplies that trifling deficiency by a mouthing and pompous style of declamation, that tho' in a line of parts where respectability of appearance, a knowledge of the stage, and a correct recital of the author's words are necessary, Mr. ABBOTT is extremely happy—yet a step beyond that, and he is very bad.

Mr. YATES played Siccus Dentatus with a great deal of effect and point; and tho' he sometimes descended to caricature, he displayed in it much ability. Miss FOSTER both acted and looked the Virginie of our imagination and the author's conception. The play possesses a great deal of interest, with no intricacy of plot; the language is energetic and figurative, and tho' sometimes beautifully poetical, is at others most puerile. The variety of very inferior characters, and the frequent introductions of mobs, disturb much the harmony of feelings which the higher parts of this play create, and unfortunately the scenery last night was so very ill managed, as to excite the lengthened and frequent hisses of the audience. The Play concluded with the most enthusiastic expressions of approbation; yet tho' there were (on its immediate conclusion) a few faint efforts made for its repetition, the announcement of the Exile silenced them all.

The afterpiece of the Libertine followed, and more pains appear to have been bestowed upon its repetition, than on its recent performance.

Mr. MEADOWS, tho' still miserable in the music, and still leaving out a very fine song, has very much improved in Leporello. Mr. CONNOR was very respectable as Don Juan, and Miss M. TREE received the approbation of the audience with the same agreeable and good-natured smile which generally plays around her features. The House was very well attended.

DRURY LANE.

MR. KEAN'S DE MONFORT.

ANOTHER well-earned tribute to genius was bestowed, last night, on MR. KEAN.

The Tragedy of De Monfort, of which he was the hero, is so justly described by Mrs INCHEALD, that we shall quote what she says of it.

"The spirit, the soul, the every thought and sensation of the first character in this piece, De Monfort, is clearly discerned by the reader, and he can account for all the events to which they progressively lead; but the most attentive auditor, whilst he plainly beholds effects, asks after causes; and not perceiving those diminutive seeds of hatred, here described, till, swollen, they extend to murder, he conceives the hero of the tragedy to be more a pitiable maniac, than a man acting under the dominion of natural propensity.

"Even to the admiring reader of this work, who sees the delineation of nature in every part, it may perchance occur, that disease must have certain influence with hate so rancorous; for rooted antipathy, without some more considerable provocation than is here adduced, is very like the first unhappy token of insanity.

"Strike not upon one particular chord in all De Monfort's feelings, and he is a noble creature; but from this individual string vibrates all that is mean and despicable in man. Thus is the mind of the lunatic generally tyrannized by one obstinate idea.

"Though hatred be the passion described in this tragedy, pride was its origin, and envy its promoter. The schoolboy, who, by his ridicule, wounded the self importance of his playfellow, might, we find, have been forgiven, had not good fortune bestowed, on this Rezenvelt, unexpected riches, social qualities, and friends; to rival those possessed by Monfort, his former superior.

"From hence is derived this most admirable moral—The proud man, yielding to every vice which pride engenders, descends, in the sequel of his arrogance, to be the sport of his enemy, the pity of his friends, to receive his life a gift from the man he abhors, and to do a midnight murder!

"Still the author's talents invest with dignity this cowardly assassin, and he inspires a sublime horror to the last moment of his existence—and even when extended as a corpse"

Vol. II.

With respect to the play as acted last night, it has undergone material alterations throughout, but particularly in the 5th Act, by the recent hand of Miss BAILLIE, the authoress. The tendency of these touches was to give a better stage effect than it formerly possessed, and this object has been in some degree attained: but still, as a piece to rank amongst the acting drama, it must ever find a KEAN to fill the part of De Monfort, or it is nothing but a work for the closet.

It is impossible to describe the powerful impression which Mr. KEAN made on the audience, on every occasion, in this extraordinary character. His furious behaviour before his servants at the intelligence that Rezenvelt, the man of his hate, was at hand—his turn of recollection smothering a further exposure of the cause of his emotion—his constrained reception of Rezenvelt,—and, on whose departure, his burst of “Hell hath no greater torment for th’ accurs’d

were severally expressed in the most admirable manner. His interview with his sister, Jane de Monfort, wherein he avows his secret antipathy to Rezenvelt, and concludes with exclaiming—

What would I give to crush the bloated toad, was finely marked with vain attempts to keep down his master-passion in deference to the lessons of his noble and beloved sister, and met with loud applause. The reconciliation scene with Rezenvelt, again afforded a varied display of his powers: and the frantic manner in which he receives and acts on the false information that makes him believe love from his sister towards Rezenvelt, not affection for himself, produced her intercessions for him to receive the man he detested into his friendship, was truly ferocious, leading as it did to the combat in which he is disarmed by the generous man he would destroy, and thence to the calmer, but more cowardly resolution to way-lay and murder him.
So rankly do I loathe him!”

But the master-piece of this great performance lies in the last act, after the perpetration of the bloody deed. Mr. KEAN’S acting here is far—far beyond the power of words to give an idea of—it must be seen only; and when so, will be viewed with the thrilling horror it last night created; thus finishing the progressive traits of the infatuated De Monfort in a climax of frenzy never, perhaps, expressed with equal force by any actor. The loud cheers of the whole audience followed Mr. KEAN’S fall—and on Mr. RUSSELL appearing to announce the performances of this evening, a general call for “Mr. KEAN” caused him to come forth and give out De Monfort for to-night, amidst deafening applause, and waving of hats.

DE MONFORT.

We had no space, yesterday, to speak of the manner in which the other characters besides De Monfort were performed on the revival of the tragedy.

Mr. COOPER, is an actor of considerable judgment, but the range of parts for which he is best calculated is limited to those that require a sententious and precise manner. He has little genius; and, consequently cannot adequately give effect to playful or vivacious qualities. He is, therefore, very unfit to perform Rezenvelt, who is a man of light heart, and easy manners. Yet, struggling with the opposing difficulties of his natural powers, Mr. Cooper rendered Rezenvelt sufficiently respectable to be not altogether unworthy the fixed observation of such a De Monfort as Mr. Kean.

Mr. BARNARD, generally makes us feel awkward, from the very anxiety he appears to have to be correct. Why does he not give his arms more freedom from the shoulder, and study some other way of disposing of them, than that perpetual bow, which they form? He has much good sense, something of the air of a genteel dancing-master, and a voice and elocution that by care might be made more potent than they are at present. His Freberg, from what we have said, may be supposed not a perfect sample of the elegant and friendly nobleman.

Mr. FOOTE as Jerome, gave a faithful portraiture of the ancient tenant of De Monfort.

Mr. POWELL's Manuel, carries with it the weight of years he is supposed to bear; but we beg pardon of the ladies.

Mrs. EGERTON, who generally gives her powerful voice too much compass, has in Jane De Monfort learnt to modulate it to an appropriate pitch, and gave her speeches in tolerably good style. Her acting, however, we do not always think correct—as for instance, when as the noble Jane, she enters the chamber where her almost maniac brother is raving over the bleeding corpse of the so lately living and admired Rezenvelt, what does she do?—Why, advances with her usual stately step, without a single glance or symptom of emotion at the horrid sight of the out-stretched victim, but at once approaches her brother erect and seemingly collected!—Surely, she ought to let her brother loose in such a scene. If she were to appear at the entrance in fearful haste—to rush in with faltering steps, exhibiting in her action the deep felt horror at the sight before her—then fall into her brother's arms overcome with the contending feelings of fraternal love, of sickening reprobation of the crime committed and pity for the slaughtered Rezevald, surely a higher and more just effect would be produced.

Miss SMITHSON'S Countess Freberg, has scarcely enough maturity about it. But it was on the whole performed with attention and pleasing deportment. The rest of the ladies and gentlemen had so little to do, that we can only record the general propriety they evinced.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Exile, we should think, proved nearly as conducive to the interests of the treasury of this Theatre last night (altho' the 24th time of its representation) as on any evening since its production; and while the House was well attended to witness the last repetition (as announced) of this favourite drama, and bid adieu to the more favoured actors in the Coronation, the Tragedy of Virginus—a classical play, in which poetry encircles with her magic wreath the stubborn wrists of nature, and fiction hides beneath the garb of art—a piece in which all our most ardent associations—all the enthusiasm which from a Livy, an Herodotus, a Plutarch, a Xenophon and a Homer, we in youth imbibed of classic character—returned in glowing recollection to our imagination, and we lost thought of the puerile race around us, absorbed in the finer feelings of the Roman Father—yet on this occasion the Theatre was comparatively empty! So much for taste.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

This play is to be performed at Covent Garden this evening. Many doubts are entertained as to the validity of the asserted authorship, and many medals advanced, from which, it is affirmed, parts of it have been taken. The former we conceive to be more a point of speculation than the latter; and tho' we think that the language of this play possesses fewer of those marked peculiarities of style which characterise Shakspeare's writings, it nevertheless bears evident traces of that great master's pen. It is inferior in characters, plot and circumstance, to many other of his plays, and is supposed to have been one of his earliest productions. The style is simple, and the poetical allusions often highly beautiful. We were much struck with the following one, which tho' rather hyperbolic, is still consistent with a lover's thoughts. The gentlemen are comparing the charms of their mistresses, when Valentine says, that the fair one of his friend "shall be dignified with this high honour—to bear my lady's train; lest the base earth should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss, and, of so great a favour growing proud, disdain to root the summer swelling flower, and make rough winter everlastingly." The character of Julia very much resembles Viola, in Twelfth Night, and the language and style of Launce remind us of Launcelot's in the Merchant of Venice, as does the first discourse between Julia and her maid. The sudden love of Proteus (in defiance of honour and pledged vows) for Silvia, is highly inconsistent. The play in itself is dull, nor has it ever been a favourite.

Mr. KEAN continues to give existence on the Stage to the Tragedy of De Monfort. Miss BAILLIE is fortunate.

TO THE PROFESSORS OF THE HISTRIONIC ART.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

We have received a Letter which contains matter of the highest importance to your interests, and which we propose to insert in to-morrow's Paper, with a reply from ourselves at some length, provided nothing new occurs in the Theatres to occupy the space we intend to devote to the subject this epistle alludes to. You must be conscious, Ladies and Gentlemen, that we have, throughout this work, evinced an ardent desire to do justice to you and to the Public; and, be assured, that on an occasion such as the present, we will not be found deficient in guarding your reputation and welfare.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE are really doubtful as to the subject we should begin with for our remarks; the general disposition we know, demands at first a minute and long account of the gaudy attractions of the Carnival; but in adherence to better taste, we commence our task of observation upon the merits or defects evinced by the performers. In our remarks of yesterday, upon the play of The Two Gentlemen of Verona, we stated that it had never been held in equal estimation with Shakespeare's other dramatic productions, and that it needed those striking points of character and situation, and a greater variety of incident and sentiment to create a pleasurable feeling on its representation. This has in some measure been effected by the interspersion of music, and though such introductions in more favored writings of our bard, we deem as sacrilegious, yet as the sonnets are productions of Shakespeare, and much tend to lighten the interest of the play, such introductions may easily be produced. We never saw any piece in which the principal characters (as they are termed) were so ill performed. Messrs. Farren, Liston, and Blanchard, with Miss M. Tree, and Miss Hallande, being the only persons in the play whose efforts are worthy of notice. Mr. Jones, though quite unfit for, and unlike Valentine, has still a something in his acting which pleases of itself; but the quaint, sharp, and peculiar style of performing (which this gentleman can never divest himself of) but ill accorded with the one Gentleman of Verona, and his sentiment in the last scene of the play, was the most comic thing we have heard for some time. Mr. Abbott, was (as usual) mouthing and respectable, he spoke the words of the author, but as to feeling, energy, or point,—a waxen image in a barber's window displays as much. This gentleman is not fit for any other line in Covent Garden Theatre, but the walking gentleman; yet our readers will scarcely credit, that he is to supply Mr. C. Kemble's place in Henry the Fourth, playing the Prince of Wales.

Mr. W. FARREN was (as he always is) excellent: he made an important feature of an indifferent part, and to him are we indebted for a chief portion of the pleasure we derived from the play. Mr. LISTON was very good as Launce, tho' 'tis true he received from the audience a lesson we think he stood much in need of—that, favourite as he is, indecencies upon the stage are not tolerated under the mask of buffoonery. Miss M. TREE played Julia in a very interesting and effective manner, and tho' we do not think that she did that justice to the music which her native powers of voice enable her to do, yet, after so severe an illness, strict criticism would be illiberal. Miss HALLANDE evinced, in Silvia, most excellent powers for acting, and gave many speeches with considerable effect. We think we never heard this lady in better voice: she sang "Oh never say that I was false" in a very superior manner. The music rather partakes of the character of the play, and displays a great want of originality. To describe the Carnival would exceed our present limits; it may therefore suffice for the present to observe, that it was exceedingly splendid and beautiful. The house was crowded to excess.

The Duke of York was present; and also Mrs. Garrick in good health.

IN our yesterday's paper we referred to a letter, which we had received, of considerable importance to the performers at our Theatres: we now present it.

"TO THE EDITORS OF THE THEATRICAL OBSERVER."

"Gentlemen,

One of the juniors of my family having purchased your papers, they fell under my notice; and I will do you the justice to say the work appears conducted on honorable principles. As it bears such a character, and is devoted to Theatrical subjects, I have thought it a proper medium, (with your permission) of communicating my opinion on a matter as much connected with the interests of the Stage, as with those of Society—namely—the private character of Theatrical Performers.

It is, I think, notorious, that of all classes of the community, there is none which has at all times contained so large a proportion of ill-conducted members as that of the profession of the Stage. Amongst the men there have been found innumerable debauchees, unprincipled spend-thrifts, and insincere friends; and amongst the women, too many exhibiting a disgusting levity, or who are no better than public courtezans. Now what can be the character of an audience in this christian country, who sit with delight to witness the performances of persons thus degraded by vice! Are we, because they possess talent, to forget they want virtue? Is it possible for a well-constructed mind to receive gratification at the hands of those it contemns? Shall we applaud the very person who in our heart we despise!—No—the spectator that does so is an errant hypocrite, and merits the contempt he suppresses. For my part, gentlemen, I cannot countenance an amusement that is not conveyed in a pure shape, both in language and action; and through the medium of an individual to whose private conduct there is no high moral objection. You must, therefore, suppose I seldom visit our Theatres; or allow those of my children who I can controul, to do so; and you may imagine I set my face against their attention being drawn towards those places of entertainment. If it were in your power to render the acting Drama, and all the representatives of its characters worthy the esteem of good men, I will say, (without a glance of self-commendation,) you shall have the support of

Vol. II.

To Civis we will say, that if it is in our power to shew him the erroneous grounds on which he has formed his opinion, and that he may conscientiously take a seat in our Theatres on numerous occasions, we hope to have the honor of his name in our list of subscribers, amongst whom are some of as worthy and independent individuals as exist in this "Christian Country."

We assent to the value of good private character in every station of life; but in our view of the class of Theatrical Performers as it exists in these days, there appears no such disproportion of vice predominant over virtue as Civis assumes. If we chose to name many members of this profession whose private conduct is in any degree known to us, we could present a long list of excellent fathers, mothers, husbands, wives, brothers, sisters, &c. who fulfill the relative duties of their station with propriety. True, there may be some glaring exceptions—persons who, from the very publicity of their avocation, have the faults and errors of their life made conspicuous; but these ought not to confer a similar character on the whole body, whose reputation in Society is gradually advancing, and will, we trust, never recede. The opinion of Civis is evidently formed on what he may have heard of some particular depravity, or have read of in the Green-Room History of former times; and we think he may look to the circles, not merely where fashion moves, but where men of plain sterling worth are to be found, and seeing the number of principal members of our great Theatres welcomed there, he might, surely, consider himself not so superior a being, as to be above permitting them to rehearse or embody the passions in his presence. We admit, that where gross personal misconduct in a performer, has become "notorious," there can be no very high satisfaction in witnessing their histrionic efforts: but at the same time it becomes a questionable point—how far the public have a right to sit in judgment on the private behaviour of a person, who only appears a candidate for approbation as one of the characters of the Drama. As to the Plays in which Civis would demand purity—he will find some, we think, that convey sufficient morality for a divine; and so we hope to find him patronising Morton, &c. the Histrionic Artists, and—The Theatrical Observer.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Two Gentlemen of Verona has undergone some judicious alterations.—The house was excessively full.

DRURY LANE.—De Monfort still continues to draw good Houses.

We have to apologize for the mistake (the first of the kind which has occurred) in a few of Thursday's numbers—The Coronation, was announced instead of Maid or Wife? The first intimation from Drury Lane was to this effect, though afterwards altered. There were not more than 800 of these bills printed, and in the greater number of our circulation the error was corrected.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Two Gentlemen of Verona was on Saturday night repeated, and though it underwent many alterations since its first representation, the first act being shortened, and many scenes curtailed of their dulness, it is still very heavy in its representation. Messrs. Jones and Abbott retain the happy peculiarities of perfect unlikeness to the characters they perform:—The former is as much the quaint pert coxcomb in Valentine, as the latter is the dull prosing statue of a Proteus. Miss M. Tree sang considerably better than on the previous evening; and Mr. Liston continues to avoid a repetition of the censure he on Thursday received.

The Carnival has undergone some alteration, tho' the last scene (which if properly managed is very beautiful,) was very ill done.—Morning, noon, evening and night, cease to perform their courses round the earth, and in their stead the Genius of Pleasure favours the audience with an indifferent Pas Sual.

Miss HALLANDE was extremely ill, and obliged in the second act to leave the stage; and tho' she resumed her duties, several pieces of music were left out. The Theatre was very full.

The entertainments concluded with a new afterpiece, called The Two Pages of Frederick the Great, which most completely succeeded. This farce is a translation from an old French entertainment, some years ago performed at the Theatre Francaise, and with several others of a similar description founded upon anecdotes of the Prussian King, remarkably successful on the Parisian boards. Mr. POOLE (the author of Match-Making, an afterpiece of some merit produced last season at the Haymarket) is the translator of this trifle. The plot of the farce is as follows:—The widow and daughter of a deceased Officer who distinguished himself in the Prussian service, has been by the machinations of a villain, deprived of her property, and forced to subsist chiefly upon the assistance of her son Augustus (Miss GOORE) a page in the employ of Frederick, and who (while his companions dispose of their money in frivolity and play) abstains from their amusements to assist his parent. For the purpose of presenting a petition to the King, as well as to see her son, the mother arrives at the Universal Hotel at Berlin, kept by a Prussian, Phelps (Mr. FAWCETT) who without immediately recognizing the lady, had received important services from her late husband. The mother is here visited by a friend and fellow-page of her son's, a wild thoughtless youth (Mrs. CHATTERLEY), who fancies himself in love with his friend's sister. He returns with a letter from the mother to Augustus, who in the perusal of it, overcome with fatigue from severe exercise, falls asleep, and while in this state Frederick enters the chamber. Having heard of the envious suspicions of the boy's comrades, who know not how he disposes of his money, Frederick reads the letter which lies open in the page's hand, and, struck with the character of the youth, slips into his pocket a rolean of 100 ducats. The mother has been pursued to Berlin, and is saved from an arrest by Phelps. She presents her petition to his Majesty, who punishes her persecutors, and rewards the virtues of her son. There is a little underplot of some humour between the landlord and his wife. The piece is light and agreeable, tho' the love affair of the second page is rather tiresome. Mr. W. FARREN, as the King, was imitated and excited the warmest approbation of the audience. Miss FORTS was extremely interesting as Augustus, but we did not much admire Mrs. CHATTERLEY's acting—it wanted vivacity for so wild a character. Mr. FAWCETT and M<sup>s</sup>. GIBBS were both excellent. On Mr. FARREN'S announcing its repetition, he was greeted with the greatest applause, though he announced it by mistake for yesterday, instead of this evening.

DRURY LANE.

It is impossible not to perceive the difficulties under which Mr. KEAN labours to maintain, at this Theatre, the proper result of his genius. It is an easy matter for a performer of tolerable repute to go through his task with satisfaction to an audience, where he is supported by adequate talent in the other representatives of the characters in a Drama, but when the whole weight of attraction rests on the shoulders of one, where the interest of the play demands that others of the dramatis personæ should be made prominent, the highest efforts of superior skill can hardly supply the deficiency.

Thus, as to De Monfort; those who witness its performance, are not entertained with an interesting tragic story, developed with admirable effect by the excellent acting of all the principal performers. but they only see Mr. Kean act a part that enables him to exhibit his astonishing powers in the most eminent manner, whilst the other parts are indifferently represented. Audiences admire Mr. Kean's efforts, yet leave the Theatre dissatisfied; because they have nothing to dwell on with pleasure but his insulated exertions: the consequence of this is, that the attendance at the Theatre falls off, and the enemies of this distinguished actor assert his diminished power to attract, instead of owning the true cause, which lies in the bad policy of the Manager in not procuring with liberal hand, talent of a nature to give consistency and effect to every part of a Drama.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Two Gentlemen of Verona was last night repeated at this Theatre. The House was indifferently attended, compared to the two previous evenings; but which cannot excite much surprise, as the play in itself possesses not sufficient dramatic interest to render it either highly attractive or amusing, and the music partakes rather of the character of science, than of sweetness and harmony. The Carnival was the resplendent object of attraction, but which (as we asserted) will, like all such baubles formed for the imagination, be soon despised, when reason resumes its empire over folly. The play last night exhibited an unusual number of blunders; and as our brothers of Erin would say, commenced with one—Miss HALLANDE being so ill, as to be unable to perform, and a young lady, a first appearance, &c. kindly sustaining the character. This gloomy information was announced by Mr. FAWCETT. The young lady is, we hear, a Miss HERBERT, and really for the first time sustained last night a prominent character at this Theatre. The foundation of our success we have never been desirous of laying upon harsh decisions, and petulant illiberality; we shall, therefore, refrain from passing any observation on this lady's last night's attempt, though we regret to see her announced for Zelinda this evening. The machinery in the Carnival was wretchedly managed; two wings of the Palace of the Hours partly and suddenly disappeared; and a ludicrous circumstance occurred to a carpenter, who, invading the territories of pleasure without sufficient caution, made his debut to the audience in an unwilling somerset over the clouds, and remained for some time with his heels kicking in the air, to the great amusement of the admiring beholders. The boat which was to bear the fugitives from Milan, met with so sudden a check, that its rower was capsized into the stream, and finding his attempts to set his vessel afloat quite fruitless, he with a great deal of sang froid made his exit through the waves. The play concluded heavily, though the afterpiece of The Two Pages of Frederick the Great made compensation for it.

The Slave is the entertainment for this evening. This piece is written by Morton, the author of Speed the Plough and several dramas founded on the German school. The music is sweet, and the play more calculated for dramatic effect, than for perusal: the language of Gambia (the leading character) is energetic: and though often strained and bombastic, possesses many poetical beauties; yet this individual, in whom the chief interest reposes, rather presents to the imagination a picture of ideal conception, than of rational speculation. The other characters are well drawn, and with infinite humour; possessing all the requisites of broad farce to favour their admittance into public approval.

We think the managers wise in putting off Henry the Fourth, as Mr. ABBOTT'S Prince of Wales would really have been an insult to a London audience.

DRURY LANE.

WE are happy to state that Hamlet was performed here last night, for the second time this season, in compliance with the universal sentiment of Mr. KEAN'S excellence in this character, evidently expressed on the former representation.

We have nothing to remark on the present occasion, but the general adherence to his style of acting the part, as on the previous night—a style, which we conceive, greatly improved since his return to this country, by the close study he has, plainly, bestowed on it. He met, last night, with the most ardent applause throughout.

Miss KELLY as Ophelia, again produced a powerful emotion in the bosoms of tender-hearted maidens, as was proved by the display of many a pocket-handkerchief, absorbing the tears she drew forth by her acting the mad scene.

The other characters were cast as before, and sustained in a similar manner.

By the bye, Mr. Harley as the Grave-digger, made a blunder. In his argument, that, if the water came to the man, and drowned him, he drowns not himself—he omitted the other part of the case—if the man go to the water, but came to his ergo at once! He does this little part with much humour, and highly pleased the gods with his half-dozen waistcoats.

Giovanni in London followed, and MADAME VESTRIS again appeared with all her wonted vivacity, and was loudly applauded. This sublime piece of absurdity is announced to have nearly run its race for this season. Heaven send it may never be seen again!

The Pit and Galleries were well filled, but the Boxes were not well attended.

Mrs. W. WEST is re-engaged at this Theatre, and appears to-night as Juliet; we hope she has got rid of the whining tones of her tragic voice.

Mr. LOVEDAY, we are glad to find is announced as John Dory in Wild Oats. Why had he not the benefit of the usual puff after his first favorable appearance as Michael in The Adopted Child?

Miss Wilson is, we understand engaged at Dublin.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE commence our observations with the following quotation from yesterday's Bills of the Theatre, "the Lady who (owing to Miss Hallande's indisposition last night) performed the part of Sylvia in The Two Gentlemen of Verona, was received with the most distinguished applause by the whole House—in consequence of which, she will make her second appearance on this Stage to night, in the character of Zelinda in The Slave." We have selected this, to expose to our readers the wretched system of policy, which sometimes guides our great national Theatres. This puff really is too much—as a substitute for Miss Hallande, who was ill, the lady's first appearance (as facetiously announced) was tolerated; but the applause, so far from being "most distinguished" and given by the "whole" House, was most partial, and such as would have been bestowed upon any person on a similar occasion. While we thought this lady's performance on Monday evening, a good natured attempt to relieve the Managers from the unpleasant situation in which Miss Hallande's illness involved them, we refrained from exercising the pen of criticism, but when we are told, that "in consequence" of her success, she will appear a second time before a London audience as a substitute for Miss Stephens (the original Zelinda) the restraint we imposed upon ourselves is dissolved. At once, this lady possesses neither qualifications as a singer or an actress, to sustain the second musical characters in this Theatre; her voice is unpleasant, her enunciation bad, her action ungraceful, and her delivery rather like that of a school miss, than a person impressed with a conception and feeling of the character sustained; in short, her acting displays not a ray of animation; her musical voice is husky, disagreeable, and sometimes out of tune. This lady was a singer in the chorusses at Covent Garden, 'till the Managers anxious to catch at any-thing like novelty, puffed her into a situation which it is impossible she can maintain;—though probably not wishing to stop the run of The Two Gentlemen of Verona, the career of their protigee, will last but with it. We pity her, though we condemn the Managers, or rather the public, that will submit to impositions which would disgrace a provincial Theatre. Mr. Macready did not sustain the character of Gambia last night with his wonted energy, and seemed to labour under indisposition. Mr. Pyne's attempt at the Scotch dialect, was truly ridiculous; his first song he sang wretchedly out of tune. Messrs. Liston and Emery were excellent as the Cockney and Yorkshireman.

Mr. Abbott's Lindenberg was very good.

The House was very indifferently attended.

DRURY LANE.

THE Play which was originally announced for last night was Wild Oats—Rover to be performed by Mr. ELLISTON; but that gentleman being indisposed, the entertainment was, as our readers would perceive by our yesterday Play-Bill, changed to Romeo and Juliet—the part of Romeo by Mr. COOPER, and Juliet by Mrs. W. WEST, her first appearance this season. Every one who is at all acquainted with the powers of this lady and gentleman, naturally stared with surprise to see the whole interest of a far-famed Play rest on their exertions. After having so much of tragedy of late, and so much to expect, wherein Mr. KEAN's superior genius shines forth, it appeared like mocking the lovers of this species of drama, to present to them on one of Mr. Kean's resting days, another tragedy, to be rehearsed in school-boy style, with false diction, false emphasis, ill-modulated voice, and action unguided by any thing but the common-place rules of the art. What can the manager mean by offering such a treat as Mr. COOPER's Romeo, and Mrs. WEST's Juliet? Perhaps he was aware that his Pit and Galleries would be better filled than his Boxes, and so trusted to rant and obstreperous gesture, to catch the applause of amatory mechanics, and love-sick Dollys, and thus eke out a night without troubling his dormant Comedians. Really the public are infinitely obliged—greatly accommodated—much amused—or otherwise, abused; and Mr. MUNDEN, Mr. HARLEY, Mrs. EDWIN, &c. have reason to return their best thanks for the suspended pleasure of seeing their friends, on an evening that might have been deemed exclusively their own.

We have not patience to describe the numberless points of failure in both Mr. Cooper's and Mrs. West's performance of the unhappy lovers. If there was any thing meriting a slight applause, it was the way in which they took their departure—alias died, which was much to our satisfaction, as we were relieved the task of a further sitting over the murdered body of Shakspeare's text.

There was a thin House.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE House was last night very well attended, to witness (no doubt) the splendid effort of the young lady's vocal powers, which on the evening of Tuesday excited such "enthusiastic" applause. This is the belief, which the all-wise Managers, would impress upon the credulity of their toys the public—and these are the puffs founded on no point of truth, which daily issue from the sanctum sanctorum of their unblushing designers. Yet, we might have hoped, that as a numerous audience was collected to witness the entertainments of yesterday evening, and submit to the jarring imposition which their taste feeders had prepared for them—the latter would not be so lost to all sense of modesty, as to again inform the public of an "enthusiastic" reception, and "distinguished applause" which we assure our readers was most sparingly bestowed upon the lady in question. In fact, it could not in common taste be otherwise; for we cannot suppose a London audience before whom a Dickens, a Stephens, a Tree, &c. have appeared; would "enthusiastically" bestow admiration upon talents not above mediocrity. But our London Theatres, instead of being the Green-houses, to which the plants that reach perfection's point should be transplanted, are now become the beds of clay, which will receive and nourish any seed. We are promised a repetition of the treat to night.

---

DRURY LANE.

MR. JOHN HOWARD PAYNE'S selections, forming a Tragedy, called Brutus; or, The Fall of Tarquin, was performed here last night.

There is matter in this play that gives room for much energetic acting, and, therefore, its other qualities, which are but indifferently good, pass off without much blemish to the general effect. The character of Lucius Junius Brutus is, on the whole well sustained, and admitting, as it does, of the mental filling-up of an able actor, Mr. KEAN most happily finds it allow scope for his peculiar powers. He, last night, appeared to be slightly indisposed with a cold, but, nevertheless, he produced a strong effect by his representation of Brutus, and met with corresponding applause, particularly in the scene where Seutus avows the dishonouring of Lucretia, when, with a burst of frenzy, he exclaims,

The furies curse you then!—Lash you with snakes
 When forth you walk may the red, flaming, sun
 Strike you with livid plagues!—
 Vipers that die not, slowly gnaw your heart!
 May earth be to you but one wilderness!
 May mankind shun you—may you hate yourself—
 For death pray hourly, yet be in tortures
 Millions of years expiring!

Three rounds of applause followed the delivery of this speech.

Mr. COOPER played Titus very respectably. And Mr. POPE was unusually energetic as Collatinus. Mr. BROMLEY gave good effect to the part of Valerius. Mrs. EGERTON, as Tullia, has an imposing manner, but it is far from being correct acting. She seems more to study the gallery-effect of her speeches, than to give them with those modulations of voice and appropriate attitudes that the sense requires. Mrs. WEST enacted Tarquinia. Her smiles and natural tones we can admire, but her frowns and ranting are odious. Miss SMITHSON makes an interesting Lucretia. The audience, which was numerous and genteel, seemed rivetted on the whole performance, and the curtain fell amidst acclamations.

The Coronation followed, and the Procession-walkers, the Trumpeters, Horses, Champion, and all, performed their several parts with due effect.

The Road to Ruin, to be acted this evening, is written by Thomas Holcroft; and was first produced in 1792.

It is an interesting and amusing play. Old Dornton, is a part which Mr. MUNDEN makes much of, and we, therefore, are happy in having an opportunity of thanking the Manager for affording us the pleasure of seeing him. Goldfinch, is another character which will, we imagine, be highly entertaining, as Mr. HARLEY performs it. Henry Dornton, we perceive is to be enacted by Mr. COOPER for the first time. The whole cast is as excellent as we could well expect; and we, consequently, anticipate much delight from this evening's performance.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE following letter which we have received, we feel it our duty to lay before our readers:—

"TO MR. THOMAS, PRINTER, 6, DENMARK-COURT."

"Mr. O'CALLAGHAN, when he called on Mr. THOMAS yesterday," (Tuesday) "stated to him, that the Lady who was to play Zelinda the same evening, had a most arduous task to perform, and one that caused her much anxiety. Her debut was completely unexpected by her to take place so early, and any one accustomed to theatricals might have perceived at a glance, the trepidation which marred her efforts in so many passages. Upon matters of taste it cannot be expected that all should agree, but facts should always be strictly attended to, and candidly reported. This Lady never was in the "choruses," and has been but one fortnight engaged at the Theatre.— "Nothing extenuate, nor set down aught in malice." Is Mr. Thomas sure that the motto is apposite? If "malice" prompted not the insertion of the Critique upon the new Zelinda, a contradiction to false statements will doubtless be inserted; especially when the Editor of The Theatrical Observer knows that his authority for the contradiction may be depended on."

To the various points in this letter we have the following replies to make. "The trepidation which marred" the lady's efforts on the night of her "unexpected debut," we viewed as naturally arising from the peculiarity of Miss Herbert's, or Mrs. Boyle's situation: and refer Mr. O'Callaghan, and our readers, to our remarks on the performance of that evening. She then appeared as a substitute for Miss Hallande, who was ill, and was consequently beyond the reach of criticism: but not so was she situated on the following evening: Mrs. B. then stood before the audience as a candidate for public favour, relying on her own pretensions, which the managers had kindly announced as having met, on the preceding night, with the "most distinguished applause of the whole House." It is not for an individual who pays his seven shillings for his seat in the Boxes, to witness a performance from which the managers had led him to anticipate such exquisite gratification, to be informed, as a palliative for his disappointment, "that the lady had an arduous task to perform." or had the night before "made an unexpected debut." Why did the managers puff her so extravagantly, and place her in an "arduous situation" which she was unable to fulfil. Towards the lady it was ungracious—towards the public it was dishonourable. Neither is a critic, who has a strict duty to discharge to those persons who frequent the Theatres, and thro' whose medium their amusements are kept unalloyed, to be dictated to in his opinions and observations; and whatever might have been the "trepidation which marred her first efforts," it is but justice to say, that a glance more scrutinizing than ours would not have discovered it on their repetition. Musical "taste" may be reduced to some criterion, and, at any rate, whether a lady sings in or out of tune, is a matter not very difficult to discover. Relying on Mr. O'Callaghan's assertion, we freely apologise for our error in stating that Mrs. Boyle was in the "choruses." It is, we have been told, a relation of her's who filled a situation in that department. We know nothing of the lady, nor of Mr. O'Callaghan, though we understand he is a relation; and so far from "malice" influencing our opinions, we are totally unconnected by name, situation, and circumstances, with any member of the profession. We are happy at being corrected; and, offering "contradiction to false statements," we have but to refer to our number of Wednesday, where we pitied the lady, though we condemned the Managers, &c.

We are truly sorry to inform our readers of rather a serious accident which happened to Mr. Abbott in the last scene of the Play. Having to fight with Mr. Comer, they through some accident missed their cuts while on the Stage, and the sword of the latter gentleman inflicted a wound beneath one of Mr. Abbott's eyes, who uttered two or three shrieks, and was borne off the Stage. Mr. Jones immediately came forward, and requested the indulgence of the audience, who with a proper feeling commanded the instant fall of the curtain. Medical gentlemen immediately dressed the wound, and applied leeches; the cut was immediately under the eye, and though not likely to affect the sight, is still a disagreeable wound. The House was very full.

DRURY LANE.

The Road to Ruin was extremely well played here, last night; and if there had been due notice given of its performance, undoubtedly there would have been a much fuller House than there was.

Mr. MUNDEN's Dornton is a most interesting representation of a fond father, with his heart attacked on one side by his son's follies, and on the other by his virtues. Our old favorite gave a richness and truth to the feelings thus created, that came home to every bosom, and raised there the glow and sympathy he so fully expressed. Mr. Munden filled this character on the first performance of the Comedy in 1792, and he must associate with it, the pleasing reflections of having by his impressive acting contributed most largely to its permanent success, which brought timely pecuniary assistance to a worthy man, labouring by his genius to support a large family.

Mr. GATTIE makes an admirable Sulky.

Harry Dornton in Mr. COOPER's hands was too solid; but, on the whole, the part was very well performed. His acting in the Sponging-house, where he endeavours to drown his disturbed reflections, and make Milford as happy as he would seem, was the most effective, and met with applause.

Mr. HARLEY's Goldfinch was highly amusing; and Mr. KNIGHT's Silky very good.

DRURY LANE.

LAST night, this Theatre was devoted to Melo-drama, Spectacle, and Farce. Ellu Rosenberg, is a good thing of its kind; The Coronation, very magnificent; and Monsieur Tonson, a worn-out joke very well performed—So much for these. This Evening, we are to have Mrs. Centliere's amusing Comedy, The Busy Body. The Manager to be commended for the attention he is at length paying to the lovers of Comedy, by bringing forward stock-pieces of this class. The play in question, is full of excellent situation, agreeable bustle, and lively dialogue; although it is sometimes not quite delicate, nor the wit of the highest order. The characters are, like most of those of its day, in general a good deal out of nature. The Plot is founded on the passions of love, suspicion, avarice, and curiosity.

Sir Francis Gripe, was an eminent part of Mr. Dowron's, whose style of acting was in some respects well calculated for it. Yet he was not capable of giving the highest effect to the chuckling satisfaction Sir Francis feels at his supposed favor with his "Chargy." His manner and appearance did not adequately correspond with the idea of a man who could be so easily fooled and imposed on by a young girl; but where he had severity, or an unfeeling heart to display, he fully succeeded. We shall not anticipate our remarks on Mr. GARDNER's mode of acting this character: yet we will say, the admirers of genuine acting are not likely to be absent on the occasion.

The time this piece generally takes in representation, is about an hour and forty seven minutes. The 1st. act occupies sixteen minutes—the 2nd. act, twenty-four minutes—the 3rd. act, twenty minutes—the 4th. act, twenty-four minutes—and the 5th act, twenty-three minutes. Half-price, usually about half-past Eight o'Clock.

Vol. II.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE House was last night well attended, nor has the brilliancy of "that classical embellishment of a play of our immortal Bard's"—the Carnival, eclipsed the splendour of Elizabeth's Coronation. The pieces went off as usual.—The old and established favourites the procession walkers, have no reason to complain of the gratitude of an appreciating and enlightened public, that owes to them so many favours. The Two Gentlemen of Verona is to be acted to-night, and Mr. Connor supplies the place so unfortunately left vacant by Mr. Abbott.

Our publisher informs us, that a Mr. W. West, entered his shop, and in a very rude and peremptory manner insisted upon knowing who were the Editors "of this trumpery paper," (which had put this little man into so great a passion,) as he meant to go to HIS attorney, and prosecute the authors for a LIBEL, in number 28, of 'The Theatrical Observer, upon the acting of his wife, Mrs. W. West of the Drury Lane Theatre, we, having in our observations on the previous evening, given it as our opinion, that Mrs. W. plays Juliet in a very insufficient manner. The Editors of this Paper beg to inform this Mr. W. West, that the printer's and publisher's names are attached to the publication; and the law admits of their responsibility as sufficient.—They further would advise him to equip himself a-la Quivotte, (should a Rozinante not be found, a kindred ass may serve the purpose in this "piping time of peace") and armed with fi. fas. capius, and *injunctio*s, issue forth amidst mankind, and inflict a condign punishment on all darkened and unilluminated misbelievers, who will not yield their judgment to his superior decision, and proclaim the "peerless" abilities of his Dulcinea. Yet, the Editors assure this Mr. W. West, that not even the verdict of a special jury which might pronounce Mrs. W. West qualified to sustain the part of Juliet with due effect, would alter their opinions of her decided incapability. We are not to be bullied out of the duty we owe to our readers:—"Go mend thy wit good youth, or else 'twill fall to cureless ruin—MER. OF VENICE."

---

We have to acknowledge the receipt of T. Q's favor, respecting Mr. C. Kemble, we shall make strict enquiry, and hope to answer T. Q's questions in our next.

We have received "a Subscriber's" letter—under the present circumstances of Mr. Abbott's illness, a reply in full would be indelicate.

We understand that Mr. Abbott's wound is not serious, yet within hair breath of having proved so. The eye-lids were separated, though the pupil was untouched.

DRURY LANE.

The Busy Body drew a genteel and numerous audience to this Theatre, on Saturday evening, who testified their satisfaction by repeated applause, and continued smiles and laughter.

Mr. MUNDEN acts Sir Francis Gripe in a manner that we cannot conceive it possible to be surpassed, except in the parts where austerity or a malignant feeling, has to be expressed, when we cannot bring ourselves to think him in earnest. This gentleman is ever most triumphant in the good-humoured man—a line in which he stands without a rival.

Murplot, the next prominent character in this Comedy, was performed by Mr. HARLEY, with good effect. Our only objection to his style is, that he does not throw into it more of the air of the gentleman. Bustle is not always inconsistent with a certain degree of elegance.

Sir George Airy by Mr. PENLEY, and Charles by Mr. BARNARD, were tolerably well acted—but, the formal manner of the latter, is a great draw-back on the judgment and attention he usually displays. Mr. GATTIE, makes a good Sir Jealous Traffic. Mrs. EDWIN's Miranda, is an agreeable performance, and Miss KELLY's Patch, as good as the part admits of being made. Mrs. ORGER, is a pleasing Isabinda.

After the Comedy, The Coronation was presented "for the last time until the Christmas holidays." And the entertainments of the evening concluded with A Day after the Wedding, Col. Freelove by Mr. RUSSELL, and Lady Elizabeth Freelove by Mrs. W. WEST. It shews a very indifferent judgment of the talents of his performers, in the Manager presenting this piece thus cast. Neither the lady nor the gentleman are at all calculated for these characters. Mr. Russell is never seen with much effect except in low Comedy parts;—and Mrs. W. West, although often employed as the heroine of Tragedy, is only to be admired in characters, without high-wrought passion. Her person, natural voice, and manners, are interesting; but her features do not well express strong emotion, nor does her voice adequately support violent declamation, and gentleness sits with grace on her. Whoever has seen her in Lady Amaranth, in Wild Oats, will understand her forte, as she performs that character de-lightly. She has the figure, but wants versatility for such a part as Lady Elizabeth Freelove, and, therefore, failed to make any impression. This lady's husband, in our Saturday's paper, received from us a reproof for his improper conduct arising from our just criticism on her Juliet; but we need hardly say to our readers, that we shall feel pleasure in commending Mrs. West's performances on every occasion, where they properly demand praise.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS Theatre was on Saturday as numerously attended as we have observed it to have been on any evening since the first representation of The Two Gentlemen of Verona, and its introduced pageantry. The new pantomime is preparing for the Christmas holidays, though too many evenings of the present season have become holidays (if dramatic sights of nonsense and splendour indicate them,) and a misplaced custom, originating in the amusement of our children on their return from school, is from the modern taste adapted to all great babies of the present age. The pantomime we understand, has been rehearsed: and conscious of the interest which so interesting a matter would create, and of the anxiety naturally felt by a liberal and discerning public, respecting the intellectual hashes preparing for their refined tastes, we have made every inquiry upon this important point, and from the best sources are informed, that the subject of the forthcoming treat is selected from—or rather called—Mother Bunch and the Yellow Dwarf! Any dissertation on the merits and peculiar excellences of the original, would be, we are aware, unnecessary: as the audiences of the present day are too well read, and versed in matters of refined taste, to need our aid in this. It is with serious regret that we announce the doleful intelligence (which may be considered as a national cause of woe, but which our duties to our publication compel us to make known) that there will be no pantomime at Drury!!! “Let all the Prison Gates be shut,” &c.—TOM THUMB. Mr. Elliston resolving no longer to be trammelled by the absurdities of public taste, but determined, Phoenix like, to rear the drama in its legitimate and unpolluted state, e'en from its ashes, and casting from the proffering hand of base corruption the poisoned chalice of self interest, and exclaiming with Virgil, “Vincit amor patria,” announces to the world, “Giovanni in Ireland!” Mr. Connor played Proteus on Saturday evening, and much relieved it from the dull prosing sameness which was wont to serve us as a narcotic in its former representations. This gentleman possesses many qualifications for an actor much above mediocrity. His education has been that of a scholar, his manners are those of a gentleman, his voice is good, his features striking, and his action not displeasing: but there is a peculiarity he possesses, which, till he's rid of, must ever impede his advancement, viz. a seeming catching of his breath and constant motion of his lips, most disagreeable to the eye and ear—but upon the whole his Proteus pleased us much.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Two Gentlemen of Verona and the melodrama of The Blind Boy were last night performed at this Theatre, and attracted a numerous audience. The former piece is not of that cast which, on each frequent repetition displays new beauties to the auditor whose mind from dwelling on the general effect, traces with delight the concealed beauties which connect the whole. Mr. Connor appears to have given much attention to the part of Proteus, and he much improved his first performance of it. Proteus is one of those inconsistent characters whose improbable features require to be portrayed with delicacy and point, or, by unmasking them lamely to our view, they excite ridicule by their extravagances, rather than interest by their connexions. Mr. Connor throws those shades into the part by which its deformed points are softened down, and its few beauties coloured to true taste. His exit in the second act, where he so absurdly imbibes his passion for Silvia, was given with point, and marked the faint beamings of the man, dawning through the mist of villainy and folly. We are always happy at noticing efforts combined with qualifications to obtain the favour of the public.

Mr. W. Farren, who possesses a happy versatility of talent, is constantly employing himself in search of varieties to render the character of Sir Thurio more prominent: 'tis at best an indifferent part, which he has done much with.

Mr. Liston nightly fixes his eye upon some favoured object in the pit, from whose disconcerted look and smile he generally succeeds in obtaining those of the whole house.

Miss Tree exerted herself with very great effect both in the vocal and acting department.

Vol. II.

Now that this play is drawing towards its conclusion, we should like to enquire of Mr. Comer the meaning of his grimaces and pantomimic gestures with Speed in the 3rd. scene of the fourth act. We have not remarked it before in hopes of ~~making~~ the discovery we now seek: we dare say there is a good joke at the bottom, though it is a pity that the audience should be deprived of participating in it.

The Blind Boy followed: we doted through it in one corner of the upper Boxes.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN's performance of Brutus, for the second time this season, attracted a respectable audience, last night. We have nothing new to remark on the manner he represents this character, except that his voice being in better condition than on the former occasion, he was enabled to give his speeches with increased effect. Mr. POPE, one might suppose not well calculated for the part of Collatinus, who is a young man; but he really contrives to hide his years in the garb of the manly Roman, and elicits as much fire as could be desired from the abused husband of the fair and virtuous Lucretia. The Tragedy was excellently well received.

In the Farce of The Bee Hive, Mr. HARLEY as Mingle, bustled to good purpose.

GIOVANNI IN IRELAND.

The promised novelty under this title, we presume, is formed in the mould of Giovanni in London, with the difference of some Hibernian humour. To us it appears dangerous ground for the gay Libertine to tread on—and more talent than is displayed in the latter piece will be required to keep him from being knocked on the head at his outset. The natives there are not to have their Judy's pulled about with impunity, and so Mr. Giovanni may chance to be sent to the direct before he's well brought forth. If Mr. FITZWILLIAM is to be a prominent Pat in this "Extravaganza", we beseech him to take lodgings in Dyot Street, St. Giles's, and receive lessons in the true Tipperary brogue.

Wild Oats is to be acted to-night, and is cast in the very best manner the corps dramatique of this Theatre admits of. We observe it is played "By Express Desire:" whoever has commanded it, is a person of much better taste than the one who intimated a Special Desire to see Giovanni in London.

Mr. LOVEDAY, who made a very favorable debut as Michael in The Adopted Child, makes a 2nd. appearance here, in the Comedy, as John Dory. He has not much to do; but from the style of his Michael, he is likely to do that little well.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS Theatre was last night numerously attended before the half-price frequenters entered: the pit appeared to be nearly full, and the dress boxes, circles, and galleries, presented a most respectable appearance. The Exile and The Coronation have not, therefore, lost their charms; and though in our private characters we rejoice at the prosperity of any establishment which gives support to so numerous and respectable a class of persons, we nevertheless wish it was founded on a nobler basis than the depravity of public taste. Neither the play nor its introduced pageant, received those rapturous expressions of approbation which they were wont to excite: and even our representative at the court of Petersburg, was treated with a degree of neglect highly unpatriotic. Mr. Young seemed to exert himself with more than usual energy, and the intonations of his voice in many passages, produced a strong effect. The other characters were supported as usual.

We received a letter of enquiry as to the duration of Mrs. Tennant's engagement—she is (we are informed) but a tenant at will.

DRURY LANE.

Wild Oats was performed last night, to a very thin house. The Pit was not half full, the two front rows of the Galleries only occupied, and the dress and first circle Boxes had many a melancholy gap. Notwithstanding this gloomy poverty of company, the admirable acting of this lively Comedy warmed the audience out of the cold aspect it at first presented, and made them as mirthful as if the spirits were not operated on by the absence of a gay throng. We must attribute this bad attendance, not to a want of admirers and supporters of Comedy, but to the uncertainty that has of late so often marked the arrangements at this Theatre. In the Play-bills of last Saturday, The School for Scandal, was announced for Tuesday evening, but on Monday, we find Wild Oats substituted for it. This indecision naturally creates a doubt of adherence even to the change, and consequently many people keep their money, and their love of the genuine drama, for another occasion, when there may appear less probability of disappointment.

Mr. ELLISTON performed Rover with much animation and effect; and notwithstanding the many years his face has been familiar to us, we can almost imagine him as young and volatile as twenty-one could make him.

We miss Mr. DOWTON sadly in Sir George Thunder; but Mr. GATTIE fills the part respectably. We were not disappointed in Mr. LOVEDAY's John Dory: he acted it to the life; and will prove a valuable addition to the Drury-lane Company, particularly in characters of a plain, blunt, and feeling description. He met with much applause.

Mr. MUNDEN, as Ephraim Smooth, was very laughable. Why does not Mr. KNIGHT repress his anxiety to produce effect?—it often occasions him to over-act, and gives a tricky air to his performance, which may not certainly be obvious to all, but too many see it, and regret that he does not depend on a more chastened style. His hysterical laugh is an instance; and, by its frequent repetition, rather disgusts than pleases the judicious. His Sim is, on the whole, a very clever piece of acting.

Mrs. W. WEST's Lady Amaranth we are happy to notice with our unmixed approbation—it is gentle, graceful, and judicious.

Miss. KELLY played Jane in the most natural and humorous manner, and shared with brother Sim in creating the laughter and applause of the audience. The other characters were well supported. Mr. VINING, however, must pardon our remarking, that although he enacted a poor player, he might be supposed possessed of a pocket-handkerchief, and should not assist his nose with the back of his hand, and afterwards wipe it on his lower garments.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS Theatre was last night most numerously attended to witness The Two Gentlemen of Verona, and the performance seemed to create a very general sensation of delight. Miss Hallande returned to her professional duties, but appeared still to labour under indisposition. Miss Tree was encored in two songs, and sang with more than usual effect. We would recommend a little more attention paid to the glee of "Good night, good night" 'twas miserably managed.

The following letter, which contains sentiments very generally felt, we insert, followed by our observations.

"Mr. Editor,

I may be wrong in my opinion, but it appears to me that there is a duty due towards the Public, from the Managers of our national Theatres, to exert their best endeavours for the promotion of the gratification of the former, by engaging the best talents within their power to procure. Permit me then, through your independent and respectable publication, to ask, why the services of Mr. C. Kemble are not employed at Covent Garden?—a gentleman whose talents are the theme of general admiration, and whose performances in a certain line have no equal; surely this is bad taste (as well as policy) on the part of the Managers, and if Mr. C. Kemble is not engaged because Messrs. Young and Macready's are, it is not a sufficient reason: as there are many characters Mr. C. Kemble performs, for which neither of the two former gentlemen are qualified.

I am Sir, your well wisher,

T. Q."

We have made such enquiries as, we trust, enable us to answer this letter with some degree of accuracy. It is undoubtedly, (as our correspondent observes) the duty of the Managers to study the gratifications of their supporters, the public; and, it is but justice to the management of Covent Garden to observe, that though such exertions have been often (and are now) misdirected, the most liberal policy, and strenuous exertions mark their course. Respecting Mr. C. Kemble, the fault (if so we may term it) exists with that gentleman alone; a part proprietor of the Theatre—and old established favorite—and "the last remaining heir of princely York" he refuses, (generally speaking) we understand, to play inferior characters in pieces, in which either Mr. Young or Mr. Macready sustain the chief ones; and desires the sole possession of such parts as Hamlet, Macbeth, Richard, &c. It was, we are told, the anxious desire of the Managers to make such arrangements for the admission of Mr. Kemble into the Theatre, as might be consistent with the proper views of all parties, but on the point above stated, the latter gentleman was inexorable. If these be the facts (and through information only, though such as we think we can rely on, have we obtained them) we think Mr. C. Kemble acts unwisely: there are certain leading characters, which he alone is qualified to sustain, and give their due effect to; and even many parts which bear the title of inferior ones, are by his acting, made indeed "the theme of general admiration: an instance of which, we will merely revive in the memory of our readers, by alluding to the impression which his Teilius forced upon their hearts; but in a Theatre which contains such prominent talent, the palm of superiority cannot be borne by one.

DRURY LANE.

THE first appearance, this season, of Mr. KEAN in the character of Sir Giles Overreach, attracted a genteel and rather numerous audience here, last night.

Sir Giles is nothing more than a hideous caricature of a bad man: a rude out-line of covetousness, and of ambition in one of its lowest walks, which are not only unmasked, but loudly proclaimed by their possessor as the cherished qualities of his soul. In this there is more than a natural daring; it is super-human: it is fiend-like. And who is there, at present on the British stage, that can embody such feelings and give them all the diabolical expression they are susceptible of, Mr. Kean?

However, is not of a nature to afford him much scope for display at, until the last act, when the overwhelming fury that breathes for the destruction of those who have out-witted him, but that only blasts his powers, and casts him raging to the earth, is wonderfully displayed.

We do not think Mr. Kean is by any means equal to himself in several of the less impassioned scenes. He, there, frequently is quite lost to the due prominence of Sir Giles; and in colloquial passages too often forgets the natural, for what he, perhaps, considers a more effective style. The effort of last night produced much applause towards the conclusion.

Mr. MUNDEN made Murall very entertaining.

Mr. COOPER's Welborn is a respectable performance; but he wants the light-hearted manner of the character: a defect that renders his Welborn a very sober, solid youth, in opposition to the author's intention. His second dress was quite a-la-laquis.

We expected a better Justice Greedy than Mr. LOVEBAY made: yet it was not bad. This gentlemen, we think, might draw very confidently on his powers, and give himself up more to the part, if it be repeated.

Mrs. KNIGHT was more than usually successful as Lady Allworth.

Mr. HARLEY as Popolino, in the Farce of The Sleeping Draught, kept the house in a roar of laughter.

DRURY LANE.

The performances of last night were, Maid or Wife? The Coronation, and Monsieur Tonson; and consequently we critics could not be expected to be very desirous of encumbering ourselves with our ear-trumpets or our spectacles: although our night-caps might have proved useful. We do not deny that for once in a way, these representations might amuse us; but where the understanding is not complimented with some offerings of reason, it is hardly to be expected that the senses of seeing and hearing can long derive pleasure from what has lost the charms of novelty.

The Manager of this Theatre has published the following notice:—

"On Monday next, in compliance with the accustomed practice of the patent Theatres, from the days of GARRICK and RICH, of representing the Ceremonial of every Grand Installation in various dramatic pieces, will be presented, for the first time, a new Extravaganza Opera, in three acts, called Giovanni in Ireland, with entirely new Scenery, Dresses, and Decorations. The Airs are chiefly selected from the Irish Melodies, the Medley Overture and new Music composed, and the whole arranged by Mr. T. Cooke; The Scenery, by Mr. Marinari, Mr. Andrews and Son, and various Artists; the Dresses, by Mr. Banks and assistants, Miss Smiths and assistants; the Decorations by Mr. Morris and assistants. In Act III. will be introduced the Ceremonies and Processions, incidental to the Installation of the Knights of St. Patrick.—In the course of the piece will occur the following new Scenery. Dublin Bay by Moonlight, with the arrival of the Packet off the Pigeon-house,—Interior of Castle Rackrent, with the Residence of King Corney and the Wild Irish Girl,—Donnybrook Fair,—Interior of a Shebeen or Whisky Shop at Tipperary,—Green Room of Kilkenny Amateur Theatre,—Interior of Kilkenny Amateur Theatre, during a Performance,—Exterior of the Convent of St. Dominic, at Sligo,—Convent Gardens and Novice of St. Dominic's Turret,—Phoenix Park and Picturesque View,—Hall of Justice in King Corney's Palace,—Sackville Street, Dublin, from Carlisle Bridge, with the Post Office, Rotunda, and Nelson's Pillar,—Exterior of St. Patrick's Cathedral, as fitted up for the Installation of the Knights of St. Patrick,—The Custom House in Dublin,—Harbour and Pier of Dun leary, with a distant View of the Hill of Howth, and Departure of the Royal George Yatch,—Panoramic View of Coast Scenery, Ocean, and Milford Haven,—Arrival of the Royal George,—Grand Emblematical Vision.”

With respect to the introductory apology for making a “ Patent Theatre,” a place for exhibiting Raree-shews, we have to enter our protest against the sanction of any name, even a GARRICK’S, for an abuse of the privileges bestowed by the Royal Patent, on the two principal Theatres. The object in granting those privileges was to promote and sustain the legitimate drama in a manner worthy of the taste, art, and science, that denote an enlightened people: and thus to refine a noble source of amusement, that should be fraught with instructive lessons on the passions and the manners. RICH had been a famous harlequin, and it is no wonder he could be inclined to exhibit dumb-shew pieces. Garrick had but the temptation of money-making, which he was rather too fond of, therefore, they are but indifferent authorities for the propriety of introducing pageants, which mislead the public taste, and deeply injure the permanent interests and reputation of the British Stage,

COVENT GARDEN.

The votaries of “ classical embellishment” are either more numerous, or less easily satiated with the repetitions of their enjoyments than we could have imagined, or ever hoped them to have been. In a city of such magnitude as London, where so heterogeneous a mixture constitutes the mass, a prevailing principle of taste (particularly as regards public exhibitions) is scarcely to be expected: the success, therefore, of puerile performances (whose sole attractions are framed for the imagination and the eye, and in which an impious offering is made at the altar of good sense by the sacrifice of individuals whose talents seem like the first smile of spring, and purest emblems of nature’s taste,—the valley’s snow-drop, planted ’midst desolation, winter, and decay) is not to be wondered at; but that it should generally affect the populace, and influence the passions, or the taste of the higher orders of Society, is an instance of public depravity—a reflection of private regret. Seven Theatres are devoted exclusively to the gratification of inferior enjoyments; in these let the lovers of Spectacle, buffoonery, and nonsense, seek for the soul inspiring objects of their desires: but let our two great Establishments, the palladiums of public refinement, the Temples where the muses should enwreath their favorite’s brows, and offer candidates for Fame’s protecting arm—the Throne, in which sits national taste, supported by wisdom, truth, and liberality, dispensing her rewards, when worth deserves—in the name of public decency, of duty, of amusement! Let these Temples be kept sacred, nor made the tools of private speculation, the cradles of infantile amusement. The House was last night numerously attended. The finale to the play was most miscreably executed.

DRURY LANE.

ROWE'S Tragedy of Jane Shore, was acted here last night, with Lord Hastings for the first time by Mr. KEAN; Glo'ster, also for the first time, by Mr. COOPER; and Jane Shore, by A Young Lady "her first appearance on any Stage" as the Play-bill informs us.

Following the order of these first appearances, we shall commence our observations with Mr. Kean's performance of Hastings, a character that does not hold forth great opportunities for powerful effect, and, therefore, not one altogether adapted for that peculiar talent which Mr. Kean possesses for presenting the passions in their most terrific and subtle form. Yet there is enough in Hastings to be worthy of the ablest actor; and Mr. Kean's good judgment did not disdain the part. That he was not wrong in trusting his fame to its fulfillment was proved by the applause he met with for his graceful, fond, forcible, and affecting delineation. He succeeded by the very restraint of his most striking powers: and won as great admiration in his softer scenes, and his patriotic addresses to Glo'ster, as he did in his passionate encounter with Dumont.

The Glo'ster in this Tragedy, has all the passions of Shakespeare's, but not the shading and strong points of the latter. Mr. COOPER'S task, therefore, was not very arduous, and he amply performed it.

But the great attraction of the evening was the Jane Shore of the fair debutante.

It is so long since any lady appeared at this theatre calculated to make a distinguished figure in the tragic walk, that a debut in the arduous part selected on this occasion produced much curiosity without raising great reliance on the success of so bold an attempt. Yet scarcely had the new candidate for public favour spoken a few sentences when the audience seemed rivetted on her admirably distinct and harmonious tones; her correct diction, just emphasis, and singular propriety and grace, in manner and expression. Her opening scenes with the supposed Dumont, and with Alicia, were marked with gentleness, and all the woe of sober suffering. Her scene with Hastings was well acted; and all the consequent anxiety and hopelessness on thus finding in her intercessor another betrayer, was faithfully expressed. But the spirited manner, in her interview with Glo'ster, when learning the tyrant's purpose "to set aside the unavailing infancy of Edward's sons," and "vest the sovereign rule in abler hands," which "Hastings does stubbornly oppose," was eminently successful: and her invocation in favor of Hastings—

Reward him for the noble deed, just heav'n's!
 For this one action, guard him and distinguish him
 With signal mercies, and with great deliverance;
 Save him from wrong, adversity, and shame,
 Let never-failing honours flourish round him,
 And consecrate his name, ev'n to time's end.

—was beautifully delivered. In the last scene she appeared in all the wandering misery described by Belmour.

"Feeble she seem'd, and sorely smit with pain."

The manner in which she performed this scene, confirmed all the previous favorable impressions she had made, and she fell amidst the acclamations of a numerous audience.

This Lady (a Miss EDMONSTONE) is not of a very commanding figure, nor can she be called beautiful, but her features are pleasing and expressive. She evidently has genius which is the gift of gifts.

Mr. ELLISTON has certainly found a jewel, on which he ought, on behalf of himself and the public, to set a just value.

Mr. RUSSELL, although called on by the audience to announce Jane Shore for this evening, thought it best to do so for Monday next.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS Theatre, though well attended last night, was not so numerously so, as on the preceding evening. The performances produced their usual effect, and the announcement of this evening's entertainments by Mr. Duruset, was very warmly applauded. Our ears were never before assailed with greater discord, than in the procession of the Coronation, the drums and trumpets, and the musicians in the Orchestra, so little harmonized, that they destroyed much of the effect.

We understand that during a performance in the Liverpool Theatre, a few evenings ago, the audience was disturbed by a violent altercation and noise behind the scenes. Mr. Vandenhoff, (the Stage Manager) being called for to account for this unusual proceeding, stated—that some unruly persons had forced themselves behind, and refusing to leave, on being requested so to do, force was necessarily employed to compel them.

It is rather a singular circumstance, that when the afterpiece which is now performing at Covent Garden, of the Two Pages of Frederick the Great, was produced in Paris, the character of the French writer was performed by M. TALMA.—Tempora mutantur!

COVENT GARDEN.

This Theatre was, on Saturday night, numerously attended. The performers appeared to exert themselves with more than usual energy; and Miss Tree, we must particularly select for notice, as deserving of a reiteration of the praise, which, in the character of Silvia, we on previous occasions bestowed upon her. The effects that her acting, and delivery of various passages produced, were really of a most powerful description; yet created, without the least appearance of art, and seemingly proceeding from a sympathy of sentiment with the object portrayed, which, breathing on the ear in sweetest harmony, reverberated in tones as soft to the hearts of the entranced listeners.—The simple reply of "and Julia herself did give it me," was as natural an effort of art, as we have for some time witnessed. Lance's companion Crab, was the only exception to the general exertions of the performers, for a few cuffs were now and then necessary to rouse his energies into action. The repetition of the play for this evening was received by a few (who were probably tired of spectacle) with loud hisses: but the multitude overpowered them. In the course of the play, between the fourth and fifth acts, the attention of the audience was arrested by a Mr. Donaldson, (as we are informed) a constable of the Theatre, who in a very energetic manner stated, "that if the gentleman who had the misfortune to lose his purse in the Theatre, would make application to him, and identify the property it contained, it should be restored to him." This was received with much applause by the whole house, and the proprietor of the found treasure (who, we dare say, had despaired of its recovery) claimed and received it. The purse, we understood, contained notes of rather a considerable value. We noticed in the King's private box, the Prince and Princess Esterhazy, and a party. Mrs. Coufts also attended in her box, accompanied by Lord Erskine and a small party.

---

DRURY LANE.

A tolerably numerous audience attended the second representation of A New Way to Pay Old Debts, on Saturday night: and the performance had no new feature sufficiently striking to require remark.

Vol. 11.

Miss EDMONSTONE repeats her arduous character of Jane Shore to night; and we have not a doubt but a brilliant audience will witness the representation. We omitted to notice a defect in the management of her voice, in not giving to it, on certain occasions, a sufficient power to reach every part of the house. This, of course, arose from her not being quite familiar with the volume of voice required in a full Theatre of such magnitude as this; and can only be corrected by experience. We assure her, that sitting on the second row of the first circle, it was only by the knowledge of the words of the Play, we could gather what she spoke in some parts of the last scene. It is true that the feebleness Jane Shore is supposed to labour under, was justly considered by Miss Edmonstone as demanding a faint tone of expression, but by not sinking her voice quite so much, and taking care to utter with distinctness, there will not be a nook of Pit, Galleries, or Boxes, but the words may reach.

Mr. KEAN, in continuing to enact Hastings, proves his good sense and attention to the wishes of the public. For it was not to be supposed he would have selected this character to increase his reputation, although he, certainly, most skilfully gives it an importance beyond what we could have conceived it susceptible of. In supporting the talent of Miss Edmonstone in this Play, he will find an advantage in the improved general effect of other pieces in which they may both perform, without a ray of his genius being eclipsed. And it is obvious that the public cannot long be attracted by an isolated excellence of one actor in Dramas that require superior talent in other of its representatives.

A paragraph has appeared in many of the newspapers, stating that Miss M. TREE had received a magnificent present of a be-jewelled tiara, jointly from Mr. REYNOLDS, the alterer of The Two Gentlemen of Verona, and Mr. BISHOP, the composer of the music, for her admirable exertions in that Play. But the latter gentleman has addressed a letter to the Editor of the Morning Post, stating, that, conscious as they are of the young lady's great merit, yet they had not made her such an offering of their approbation.

Mr. GLOSSOP, Proprietor of the Cobourg Theatre, has had a verdict against him for horse-whipping Mr. WINSTON, acting Manager of Drury-lane Theatre—Damages, One hundred and fifty pounds. The former gentleman has just erected in his theatre a Mirror Drop Curtain, by the novelty of which he expects to fill his treasury:—thus in one week he has cause for agreeable and disagreeable reflection.

---

Mr. ABBOTT resumes his part in The Two Gentlemen of Verona, this evening. We are happy at his recovery, but must regret the loss of Mr. CONNOR'S Proteus.

COVENT GARDEN.

This Theatre was not so well attended last night, as on the preceding evening of performance. The entertainments excited their usual share of applause, though the conclusion of the play met with much disapprobation; owing probably to much of the finale having been omitted: the cause (judging from what passed on the stage) was Miss Hallande's inability to sustain her portion of it; as we perceived her address Miss Tree and then Mr. Hunt, who expressed by significant glances her directions to the Orchestra. Mr. Abbott resumed his duties, and we may say his looks, as there is no visible trace of any impression left by his late accident. Miss Tree was encored in the song of "Should he upbraid," and received three rounds of applause on pronouncing the sentence we yesterday quoted. By the bye we may here apologise for a mistake in that number—the character Miss Tree plays is Julia not Sylvia.

We insert the following letter; and as the author (in his envelope) states himself willing to come forward, if required, and answer for its authenticity, we lay it before our readers with pleasure. Its contents are contradictory to our information (given in our 35th number) yet as our conduct is influenced by but one feeling—our duty towards the public in all matters connected with theatricals; we are ever willing to adopt such principles as our judgment tells us are correct.

" TO THE EDITOR OF THE THEATRICAL OBSERVER."

" Audi alteram partem."

" MR. EDITOR,

" The independence of your publication is manifested by your insertion of a letter from T. Q., respecting Mr. C. Kemble in the paper of Thursday last, No. 35, and I am convinced that your observations on that letter in the same paper, are the result of intelligence conveyed to you as correctly founded on truth.—But, Sir, you have not been fairly dealt with; it is a misstatement. I have possession of facts from unquestionable authority, (and I challenge contradiction) which enable me to inform you that Mr. C. Kemble did not stipulate to possess entirely any one character in the range of the Drama, he only required as the basis of his engagement, that he should be put on a complete equality with the first actors in Covent Garden Theatre, in respect to characters, as well as remuneration; this, you will readily agree with me, is in every point of view his due, and in this stipulation his wish was to guard against being required to play on all occasions secondary characters to bolster up the fame of those whose abilities are most certainly not superior, if they even equal his; that he has experienced this treatment is evident to any person in the habit of frequenting the Theatre the last few years, which is highly to be condemned. I hope I have a just estimate of the talents of Messrs. Macready and Young; and the same judgment obliges me to consider Mr. C. Kemble quite their equal, and perhaps superior: if so, that may be attributed to my partiality for that highly talented family: at all events you, I am sure, will allow, if Mr. C. Kemble agrees to play secondary to those gentlemen when occasion offers for the display of their particular powers, they are in justice bound to return the compliment, and this is all Mr. C. Kemble stipulated for on his engagement with Covent Garden. I think, after perusing this, you will agree with me that the Managers have not done their duty to the public in refusing to engage Mr. C. Kemble on such fair and honorable terms.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

VERITE."

DRURY LANE.

Jane Shore was repeated last night, for the second time this season, and attracted a numerous audience. MR. KEAN as Hastings, and Mr. COOPER as Gloster, gave to their several parts the same appropriate attention, and met with considerable applause. Miss EDMISTON, (whose name we erroneously spelt Edmonstone) made her second appearance, and represented the unhappy penitent, with increased effect. The tears she drew from many a fair eye, were a silent tribute to her power of influencing the heart. Her tones are most moving, without degenerating into the whine, too common in tragedy heroines. She looks to the meaning of her speeches; and utters and expresses them by the rules of nature and propriety, without a sacrifice of either for effect. Her acting in the last scene, where she appears a famished and forlorn wanderer, we will venture to pronounce the most powerful since the days of Mrs. Siddons. Every attitude is marked with the supposed condition she is in—feeble and heart-broken. The manner in which she leans against Abigail's house on her repulse by the servant, is truly piteous. Her mode of falling on her knees before her false friend, begging—

“ —————for charity's dear sake,

“ A draught of water and a little bread,”

—was moving in the extreme.—The advancing agonies and delirium of hunger, were depicted with appalling and overwhelming truth. And on the approach of her wronged husband the attitude of averted shame, and exertions of failing nature in her endeavour to avoid him, until she sinks under her feelings, were executed so faithfully as to create in the spectator the idea of reality. Discriminating applause attended Miss Edmiston throughout, but at the conclusion it became enthusiastic. This young lady is, in our opinion, judging from this performance, likely to be ranked in the very highest class of histrionic genius.

TO THE PUBLIC.

The extensive and increased sale of this work requiring the exclusive dedication of the time and attention of one person to the duty of publisher, an office has been selected at No. 29, Exeter-street, Catherine-street, Strand, from which the publication will henceforth be issued, and to which all communications are for the future requested to be addressed. The Editors avail themselves of the opportunity of returning their thanks for the extensive patronage this paper has received, and to renew their assurances—that the principles of impartial criticism on which their opinions have been founded, will ever characterize the sentiments of this publication.

DRURY LANE.

MORTON'S Comedy of Secrets Worth Knowing, was acted here last night. It is by no means a piece that raises the character of our Drama. It has morality enough; story enough; humour of a homely description; but not an iota of wit. The dramatis personæ are in general mere caricatures, intended to satirise modern life. Such are Rostrum, Undermine, Nicholas, and Plethora; but we allow to Old April, and true English Sally, a considerable share of natural character pleasantly developed.

Mr. ELLISTON, like a true commander, never flinches from active service; but is always ready to share the risks and laurels of his corps dramatique. He, on this occasion, performed the part of the good hearted young auctioneer, Mr. Rostrum, and kept the audience in continual merriment. Mr. MUNDEN personated the worthy old yeoman, grey-haired April; and blended his smiles with a passing tear, in so happy a manner, that we were ever reminded of the natural emblems of age and youth—of Winter and Spring struggling for superiority. But like the progressive seasons, as he advanced in his work of renovation for poor Greville, he cast exhilarating beams on all, until they were warmed into perfect delight.

Mr. KNIGHT'S Old Nick, was devilishly well done; and Plethora, the dregs of a debauched horse-doctor, was very weakly executed by Mr. HARLEY, which is the strongest compliment we can pay him.

Egerton, a military hero out of work, with his some dozen sentences, was walked and talked appropriately by Mr. COOPER, who we really think is a little too much used in stupid parts.

Mr. GATTIE, a gentleman, to whom a bob wig and a square tailed coat, are almost natural appendages, wore these distinguished ornaments of his person with his accustomed grace as Undermine.

Mr. THOMPSON acted Greville. We would turn with delight to a squabble among the gods, whenever he opens his mouth.

Of the ladies we will say, that Mrs. EDWIN made Sally a most entertaining creature—that Mrs. W. WEST was a more elegant and tender wife than Mr. Greville, as he appeared last night, deserved—that Madame VESTRIS was an enchanting Rose Sydney, with a delightful voice, who, by universal desire, twice gratified us with her song of The Martial Maid.

MACBETH.

This Tragedy introduces us to-night to a new Lady Macbeth. Miss EDMISTON, who has twice appeared on the Stage, as Jane Shore with great and well-merited applause, undertakes the arduous task, We have every reason to expect her full success from the excellent manner in which she executed those portions of her part in the last mentioned play, which had a spirited and firm character.

The Tragedy of Macbeth, is in a great degree founded on history; and Shakespeare has admirably depicted the ferocious and superstitious character of the times in Scotland, where the scene is laid, except at the end of the fourth act, when it lies in England. Macbeth's Castle was at Inverness, and its ruins are still to be seen.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS House was last night poorly attended until half-price, although the entertainments were, for the 30th time, The Exile (and its introduced coronation) with the afterpiece of the Two Pages of Frederick the Great. The modern lovers of the Drama were, we presume, so busily engaged with their children at home, in superintending their arrangements for their Christmas festivals, and imparting (with looks of gravity) the instructive information on those classical topics, which their favorite haunts, the temples of the Muses, have of late afforded them, that anxious to apply their acquirements to some useful purpose, they have selected the nursery, and will for a time neglect the honored seats of their high studies.

We hear it rumoured that on Saturday evening last, Mrs. Countts was so highly pleased with Miss TREE's performance of the part of Julia, that on the conclusion of the play she sent for her, and presented her with an offering in return for the delight she had created.

DRURY LANE.

A numerous and brilliant audience attended this Theatre, last night, on the representation of Macbeth. The chief novelty of the evening was the third appearance of Miss EDMISTON, who performed the part of Lady Macbeth. It would seem that this young lady, or her friends, felt the difficulty and danger of the attempt, as a short poetical Address on her behalf was spoken by Mr. Cooper, previous to the Tragedy. This, however, proved an unnecessary step, for the highly favorable impression made on the public by her Jane Shore, had secured an audience disposed to appreciate her talents.

The character of Lady Macbeth, is one that requires a commanding figure, to give full effect to the masculine ferocity that distinguishes it. Mrs. Siddons derived much of her success from the towering majesty of her form; but Miss Edmiston wants that gift, although she throws around her person an air of dignity, and wins attention by her excellent attitudes. On her entrance she was warmly greeted, and read the letter with singular propriety. But, in the succeeding soliloquy, we think she should not speak steadily gazing on the audience, but rather with a glance towards her husband's epistle, as addressing him in reference to its contents. The next soliloquy, beginning—"The Raven himself is hoarse" was excellently delivered, and loudly applauded—the reception of her new-titled husband, and the swelling ambition that prompts her murderous hint to him, were represented in a manner that amply laid open the character. She well mingled a graceful, hospitable frankness, with the stern looks that occasionally were darted on the king as he is about to enter her castle. The scene in which she works up Macbeth's soul to do the deed, was well performed: and we much admired the distinctness and effectiveness of her whispering speeches, when the murder is doing, and done—particularly where she exclaims, in a suppressed but contemptuous tone—

" Infirm of purpose !
Give me the daggers : the sleeping and the dead
Are but as pictures :"—&c.

And also on her return, when she tauntingly says—

" My hands are of your colour ; but I shame
To wear a heart so white."

Her part in the Banquet Scene was equally well acted, and her sleep-walking scene most admirable. Loud and long continued applause followed her exit. As the play is to be repeated on Friday next, no doubt Miss Edmiston will, by intermediate study, endeavour to add to the effect she produced on this occasion.

Mr. KWAN's performance of Macbeth is familiar to the public. He last night obtained the usual distinguished recognition of the audience in all those parts where he had opportunities of making an impression.

Mr. COOPER, who played Macduff for the first time, was well received, and particularly in the scene where the murder of his family is communicated to him, and in the combat.

The other characters were tolerably well sustained. The Scenery, Machinery, &c. at this House are in general wretchedly managed. Last night we had two moons in one scene—also a wood with a lamp shining through it—Banquo's chair was left for the accommodation, we presume, of some of the witches, who however at length thrust it off—and the enchanting Cauldron was nearly knocked over by the little boy who was pushed up it.

The Romp followed; and Miss KELLY, Mr. KNIGHT, &c. kept the audience in highly good humour.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS Theatre was more indifferently attended last night, than on the preceding one; previous to the commencement of the half-price, the pit was scarcely two-thirds full, the boxes presented as poor a display, and while the middle gallery contained persons sufficient to fill about three rows of its seats, the front one of the upper gallery was not occupied. Though we regret this falling off as regards the treasury, yet we should rejoice to believe, that it originated from the palled taste of modern Theatrical frequenters. The pieces went off as usual;—yet, we wish for our own gratification—for propriety's sake—and for Mr. LISTON's after fame, that he would build his present reputation less upon the practice of grimaces, which disconcerts his fellow-performers, and more upon genuine talent and humour. Luckily for him, the London audiences possess many good natured qualities, else this trick, (for such it really is,) might become too stale and unpalatable. We recommend to this gentleman—Hamlet's advice to the players.

We were much amused by Mr. ABBOTT's precaution against the repetition of his accident;—instead of exchanging cuts with Mr. COMER, (as formerly,) he makes the only two, that are made, at his opponent's sword;—disarms, and drives him off.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE number of persons who attended this Theatre, last night, was in the same proportion, we guess, to that which on the previous evening visited it. Extensive preparations, (we have been told,) are making for the approaching CHRISTMAS Festivals; nor without reason, if success be anxiously desired;—as by this time, we should suppose, the Theatrical portion of our London residents are as sufficient critics of Carnivals, Coronations, Pantomimes, Buffoneries, and Spectacles, as ever our ancestors were of Dramatic writings, either historical, moral, satirical, or humorous. But let the world move round, so that the pockets of our taste-feeders, (or rather providers) are filled, and the gods gaze and laugh—what matters it whether philosophy, sense, or reason are employed. We are frequently amused at the remarks of the spectators who surround us, anxiously attending these nightly representations of nonsense, and gazing with fixed eye-balls, and distended mouths at every petty object in the passing scene; yet, when the illusion is over, censuring the "prevailing taste," and "neglect of the legitimate Drama"!

These are the very possessors of bad taste; and these, are the authors of the nightly Spectacles which defile our Stage.

That which the town admires and supports, the Managers will of course produce; but if these longing, yet dissatisfied gentlemen, were to withdraw from their attendance,—scrupulously encourage that establishment which best deserved it: or openly condemn those amusements which they privately speak of "as puerile," yet anxiously pursue,—shows and festivals would be shortly banished to our minor boards, where they might be taught, and our "temples of real taste" present amusements, which, while they shed literature around, would exalt the mind with noble objects, inspire the breast with generous sentiments, teach philosophy to the depressed, contentment to the ambitious, virtue to the hypocrite, and holding "the mirror up to nature, show—Scorn her own image, Vice her own features, the very age and body of the time its form and pressure." Such is the intent of the Stage—how from the noble height of public good has it descended, till grovelling in the mire, it holds its sway, alone, o'er ignorance and folly!

"Eripe turpi colla jago, liber sum, dic age."—HOR.

We were rather amused by the exclamation of an Irish gentleman who sat next to us in the boxes. Upon the entrance of the cupids who precede one of the elements in the Carnival procession, he enquired of his companion, in the true native melodiousness of tone—"And is it Love that's coming now?" Being answered in the negative, and informed that it was Air—"May be so," (he replied) "but, by the blade bone of St. Patrick's holy shoulder, it means that Love 's at his old tricks of giving himself airs."

DRURY LANE.

The Tragedy of Jane Shore, was repeated here last night. The Pit and Galleries were not well attended, owing, no doubt, to the wet weather: the Boxes, however, had a genteel and tolerably numerous company. We have to remark on Miss EDWINSON'S third performance of Jane Shore, that it was improved even on the excellence of her first attempt. She represents this character in a manner worthy of the best times of dramatic history—she is calculated by her genius, her voice, her features, and, adequately by her figure, to embody tragic sentiment in its loftiest or most tender forms. There cannot now, in our opinion, be a doubt of her meeting the most distinguished honors of her profession. But let not the Managers abuse the talents they possess in her—let them not force her into endless novelty; but permit her to make her way through a few well chosen characters, until the public are fully acquainted with her powers. Nor let her even in such characters be too closely brought forward; but allow her to breathe in her study, and shape her own path to the summit of her worthy ambition.

This young lady met throughout the evening, with cheering applause, and at the close, the house resounded with acclamations.

Mr. KEAN, in Hastings, had his full share of distinction from the audience. Mr. COOPER imparted additional vigour to Glister, and was well repaid for the trouble he has been at to make more of the character than he did on the first night. We have, however, to mention one gentleman in a different manner. Why, Mr. PARR, did you exert your lungs in the last scene as if the feeble creature in your arms were deaf? Why, too, did you utter that Irish howl which set the Gods in a titter, and the imitation of which was their amusement until the farce appeared? Really, you are a worthy Diamond, but you almost wholly spoil the effect of the closing scene.

This evening Miss EDWINSON performs Lady Macbeth to Mr. KEAN'S Macbeth.

DRURY LANE.

THE Tragedy of Macbeth again attracted a numerous and elegant audience.

Mr. KEAN acted Macbeth with his customary success. In our former notice of the performance of this Tragedy we stated that he "obtained the usual distinguished recognition of the audience in all those parts where he had opportunities of making an impression;" but we did not then, from want of space, enter into his entire manner of representing the character. Macbeth is a brave, but weak man.—He has ambition; but would not seek to gratify it at the expense of blood, were not his better feelings overcome by the hopes raised by the Witches, and fostered by the predominating influence of his daring wife. We do not think Mr. Kean marks Macbeth's bending to his superstitious belief, nor the yielding to his relentless Lady, with the master-hand that he displays in the animated scenes that follow his determination to yield himself wholly to the heartless pursuit of his ambition. This, by more attention to appropriate by-play, and a deeper study of the meaning of many passages in the first and second witch scenes, and the scene with Lady Macbeth before the murder, would undoubtedly enable Mr. Kean to make a stronger impression throughout.

Miss EDMISTON, acted Lady Macbeth with increased effect, and was loudly applauded from all parts of the house. Her features are powerfully at the command of the passions, and are guided in their expressions by an excellent judgment.

Mr. COOPER represented Macduff very spiritedly—yet he does not always place the emphasis in the right place, nor regulate his voice with correctness. He, however, got great applause for the manly fury he displayed in delivering his reply to Malcolm's reproving recommendation to dispute his grievance like a man—"I shall do so." And then the softened exclamation—"But I must also feel it as a man."

In the combat with Macbeth, Mr. Cooper's sword broke off close to the handle at the first blow on his adversary's shield. Macduff was thus at his opponent's mercy, contrary to the part. Mr. Cooper appeared at a loss what to do, at length he left the stage, (where Macbeth, solus, seemed perfectly collected) and presently returned with another sword, with which he renewed the fight.

To-night is to be produced the Dressed Rehearsal of Giovanni in Ireland, by way of letting the Christmas folks know before hand what is the nature of this usurper of Harlequin's Throne.

DRURY LANE.

On Saturday night was produced the long expected "Extravaganza" entitled Giovanni in Ireland.

When we first heard of the intention to introduce the hacknied Don amongst the Hibernians, we conceived that it was the most hazardous attempt Drama-makers and Managers ever made. For as burlesque is the avowed aim of the piece, and as the received idea of Irish humor is not susceptible of much extension or variation, it follows that in this wholesale way, Paddy-wit would be soon likely to fatigue its most devoted admirers. But this Extravaganza deviated into the path of spectacle, by introducing The Installation of The Knights of St. Patrick, another adventurous undertaking, after the public has been presented for ninety-one nights with the shew of The Coronation, which was as splendid an affair as might well be expected. Under these circumstances, it may be supposed, nothing could save Giovanni in Ireland from being sent to his old friend, the devil, but excellent satire; novel humor; a well connected and interesting series of comic adventures; beautiful scenery; ingenious machinery; and tasteful and appropriate music. Well—at length the curtain is raised, and Giovanni appears—but, alas! not one of the saving qualities except the latter is to be found; and that, thanks to Mr. T. COOKE's care, had been provided from some neighbouring music-shop.

It is almost impossible to give any detailed account of the plot, from its want of connection. Giovanni and Leperello, &c. &c. land by moonlight, from the Holyhead packet, which we see arrive off the Pigeon-house. They and their fellow passengers proceed on their several pursuits, whilst we are introduced to the presence of his most vulgar majesty King Corney, in the grand hall of his Castle of Rack-rent, where an ould snuff-taking priest, Father Jos, his Majesty's Secretary of State, and Mister Padreen Gar, who holds the plough and the office of Lord Chamberlain by turns, are about the royal person to receive in due regal state, Don Giovanni and his friends, who are led thither to have a glimpse of his Majesty's beautiful daughter, the wild-Irish girl, Glorvina, Princess of Innismore. Of course the Don is smitten and runs off with the Princess, and takes Donnybrook fair in his way, where a plotting young lady, Florence McCarthy, a celebrated beauty, dressed as an Irish country lass, and new named.

Honor O'Connor, attracts the gay Giovanni, but a row in the fair puts them to flight; so we next find Miss M'Carthy scheming in a whisky shop, with a Yorkshire blade, Simon Sly; and, as she expects lovers, thinks it proper to entrench her virtue in the habiliments and appearance of an invulnerable old woman, under the name of Mrs. M'Money-mickle. This does not entirely serve her purpose, however, for Giovanni loves old women, and so she is obliged to receive his caresses. But now a theatrical whim is set on foot, and whip-jack and begone, and lo! we are in the Green Room of the Kilkenny Amateur Theatre. The Libertine is the play, and the parts are soon cast amongst the amateurs, including Miss M'Carthy, the Princess of Innismore, and Mister Leperello, &c. &c. Presently the Prompter's bell rings, and the curtain rises and exhibits a Theatre on the stage—"with a numerous and brilliant audience," consisting of nobody in the galleries, some fifty in the pit; and in the boxes, two dozen of figures made of flesh and blood, and about as many made of painted deal-board.

Amongst the company were his most vulgar Majesty, and several ladies attired in the richest glazed calico. Don Giovanni also appeared in the stage box, and was greeted with loud applause on his entre by this discerning audience, who never paid the least attention to King Corney. The first scene represented the equestrian statue of Don Guzman, who took the liberty to speak or sing his sentiments of Giovanni, and then dismounting collared the Don's Representative on the stage, and consigned him to the care of the Devil, who soon dragged him to the infernal regions—this offended the Don in the Boxes, who jumping on the stage with his drawn sword, put the Devil to flight amidst a shower of fire; on which, down went the Curtains of both Theatres to the great delight of all who possessed a grain of common-sense. Giovanni after this adventure finds food for his amatory taste in a Novice of St. Dominic—sets fire to the nunnery, and runs off with her—but they are caught, and he is brought to trial before King Corney, whilst the Manager of the Amateur Theatre, and Leporello represent the Counsel for the prosecution and the prisoner—a dubious acquittal ensues, and the whole party prick up their ears at the sound of great guns announcing the commencement of the Procession of King George, and the Knights of St. Patrick to the Cathedral for the purpose of a Grand Installation—a way they scamper, and leave room for the representation of the Spectacle in Sackville Street, which is carried to the whole depth of the Stage, and the Irish Knights, Sovereign, &c. &c. proceed from the extremity, across a platform through the Pit. Some polite ushering of ladies into the Cathedral next takes place; and the interior of the holy fane with the whole tedious ceremonies of the Installation is then presented. Giovanni, now satiated with Irish beauty, sighs again for the fair ones of England—and so departs in the Steam Packet. The whole concludes with a representation of something called a "Grand Allegorical and Emblematical Vision" which, however, our vision could not convey to our brain with sufficient distinctness to enable us to ascertain the meaning of either allegory or emblems.

At this season folly predominates; but as it is expected to produce merriment, we regret we cannot recommend Giovanni in Ireland for this purpose to the great or small babies. The dialogue is on a level with that of sundry sleep-provoking novels, where there is a lover, a lady, and a valet; whose prosing or rhyming, sighing, and joking, are on a most respectable footing with dullness. Aslternately—

The lover's gay or sad,
The lady quite as bad;
And Mister Valet glad,
To trick the dame or dad.

BELLMAN.

The audience were divided into vigorous friends, vigorous opposers, and neutrals; the two former were pretty equal in force, the latter greatly exceeded both put together. Mr. Russell was unable to announce it for repetition, and the Farce was not allowed to proceed until he again appeared, when the opposition yielded a little, and he retired with an erroneous interpretation of the public feeling—as the thing cannot possibly be continued with any good effect.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS Theatre was on Saturday night better attended than on the previous evening. The Pit, before the commencement of the half-price, was tolerably full, nor were the Boxes less so: the Galleries, being the only divisions of the House, which had the appearance of great deficiency. The general features of the performances presented little variety, though Mr. Liston received from the judicious portion of the audience, a reproof in his first scene, which will operate, we trust, with just effect upon this gentleman's future discretion, as to his extent of credit with the good nature of his censors. Not satisfied with exposing Mr. Abbott (who by the bye, seems either from kindness or necessity, the butt of Mr. L.'s buffooneries) to the censure of his auditors, he tried his usual trick on Mr. Jefferies, and succeeded so well, that though a few witless fools applauded—a sufficient number to carry correction with it, hissed most loudly, and vociferated "shame." Mr. Liston, though a favorite, (and deservedly one) is not so completely master of the opinions of the Theatrical frequenters, that he can with impunity substitute the requisites of a Booth, for those of a Theatre Royal; and we trust, that though the Managers encroach with fearless energy upon dramatic rights, and are unnoticed; there will ever be a sufficient number of discerning auditors, who will prevent the rude advances of inferior individuals.

We should like to ascertain from Mr. Jones, if politeness and custom have undergone so material a change in the present age, from the period in which The Two Gentlemen of Verona existed, that an humble individual like Valentine, should hold a conversation with the Duke of Milan, and in his own chamber, wearing, during the discourse, his cap upon his head. Mr. J.'s knowledge of the Stage, and of propriety, we thought would have ere this corrected to gross an error. During the Farce, the audience were disturbed by a drunken person, who was however soon silenced. We wish that the ladies would confine their agreeable prattle to their drawing rooms; we were much disturbed by the loud conversation of one in the Boxes.

GIOVANNI IN IRELAND.

We always regret any failure in the attempts of managers, when there appears something like proper grounds for their expecting success: But when their efforts are opposed by public opinion justly directed against them, we owe it to ourselves and our readers to unite in the general feeling, and to state our reasons for our adverse opinion.

In our last Paper, of Monday, we did little more than give the Plot, or rather adventures of Giovanni in Ireland. We, however, observed that the music formed the only attraction; and that the piece had not sufficient power of creating merriment to recommend it at this season. It might have been added, that, considering the number of young people who are treated with a visit to our Theatres during the holidays, the moral of this drama is most improper.—From beginning to end there is hardly any thing prominent but the movements and the designs of the laughing libertine, and the ladies he runs off with. What must be the impression on a youthful mind after witnessing this exhibition of loose principle attempted to be wrapt in the garb of ludicrous folly, but that of vice divested of its hideous features?

A Pantomime, where the adventures of Harlequin and Columbine, and the comic tricks they give rise to, are represented without invading any thing but gravity, is admissible for the limited period that our children are from school; and even we old folks can join in the harmless laugh with them, remembering that we were once young ourselves. But we could not bring ourselves to enjoy the smiles of our sons and daughters at the amatory pursuits of Don Giovanni personated by a woman, whose delicacy must be supposed deeply sunk in her vanity or interest, to permit her to make the sacrifice of appearing in public in male attire.

We gave a faithful account of the reception of Giovanni in Ireland in our last number. The “erroneous interpretation of the public feeling” by Mr. Russell, is proved by the Puff in the play-bills, in the following words:—

“The Rehearsal of this Extravaganza having been greeted with reiterated laughter and applause, it will be performed, for the first time on Wednesday Evening, with such new arrangements as the great extent and complication of the Scenery demand, and which will be announced in the Bills of the Day."

Now this, certainly, is not treating the public in a proper manner.—“The Rehearsal” was in fact a first representation in every sense of the word: and although innumerable orders were issued to support the piece, yet the great body of the audience were either decidedly adverse or neutral. It certainly met “with reiterated laughter and applause,” but it also was greeted at the same time with reiterated hisses, groans, off-ohs, cat-calls, cock-crowings, &c. &c. Surely the public have a right to complain of the conduct of any Manager who in presuming to state the result of a performance on his stage, suppresses that one half of the truth which he supposes does not suit his interest to make widely known. The utility of such a publication as ours, may, from this circumstance, be somewhat appreciated, as it is our chief endeavour to give correct information of the proceedings of the stage. We shall on the second representation of Giovanni in Ireland, this evening, ascertain how far the “new arrangements,” announced, contribute to its improvement. It is, however, our decided opinion that nothing can ensure its temporary success but an audience composed of representatives of the theatrical treasury, or of persons who have left their good sense at home.

COVENT GARDEN.

MR. SHERIDAN KNOWLES' Tragedy of Virginius, and the new Pantomime, are the entertainments for this evening, and will without doubt, prove highly attractive.

The former piece was produced on a previous occasion this season, and introduced for the first time, (since the opening of the Theatre for the present campaign,) our favorite Mr. MACREADY. The Two Gentlemen of Verona having been shortly after brought forward, with great success, retarded (we presume) till the present occasion, the repetition save once, of this gentleman's performances. The play possesses many poetical beauties, and the interest is very powerfully wrought; yet (as we on a former occasion observed,) the inferior characters, and introduced mobs, are so exceedingly outré, that they disturb the harmony of feelings which the more refined parts of the play create, and substitute the ludicrous for the sentimental.

The Pantomime, (if report speaks true,) is well calculated to insure success; though we shall not presume on this point to anticipate our readers enjoyments.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE entertainments last night were Virginus and the long expected Christmas festival. The galleries and pit were at first price crowded: the upper tiers of the boxes very well attended, but the dress circle indifferently so. The latter circumstance was such as is generally the case on the first night of a new pantomime; on which occasion the higher classes of theatrical persons prefer restraining their curiosity, to the probability of incurring a head-ache for the two following days: and such a precaution was, we assure them, last night not unnecessary. On the performance of the play it would be absurd to offer a remark, for the noise from the galleries quite excluded the possibility of paying that attention to the different parts of the acting, which would enable us with confidence to offer our opinion on them. The performers seemed to feel this; and leisurely walked through their characters: though in the concluding act of the piece, the Gods were, we presume, satisfied with the vengeance they had wreaked on the poor mortals who had the good fortune to be seated near the stage, and with a little calmness permitted them to enjoy a few moments of respite from their thunders. Mr. Macready in the last scene but one, where he destroys Appius, was terrifically fine, and produced some very wonderful effects. On the conclusion of the play, The Two Gentlemen of Verona was announced for this evening amidst applause and disapprobation.

After a most indifferent medley overture, the wished for time arrived, the curtain rose, and discovered a very magnificent scene, the Palace of the King of the Gold Mines: but as our readers, may not, in the course of their classical education, have perused that valued work, entitled, The Yellow Dwarf, we shall give such an outline of the original, as was selected for the purposes of pantomimic representation last night. The daughter of the Queen of Golconda is solicited in marriage by the King of the Gold mines; but a powerful fairy, Mother Bunch, has promised the damsel to her favorite—the Yellow Dwarf. The lady, in hopes of obtaining a remission of this sentence, travels to the residence of the fairy bearing a cake of maize as a charm against all ill: this cake it stolen by the Dwarf, who accordingly claims her as his bride: though she is in a trance borne back to her mother's palace, and is there importuned by her favored lover, whom she at length consents to wed. But while the ceremonies are performing, the Dwarf carries her off, though she is again recovered by the aid of the relenting Mother Bunch, who then causes the transformations. The Scenery is magnificent, and many of the tricks good, though Johnny Gilpin is rather tedious. It concluded with much success; and Mr. Grimaldi announced its repetition amidst considerable applause. The Prince and Princess Esterhazy and Family were in the King's box. A man who dropped his hat into the Pit from the Gallery, procured it by letting down a number of handkerchiefs tied together and hauling it up.

Miss STEPHENS returns to her engagement at Covent Garden on Tuesday next, and appears as Diana Vernon.

DRURY LANE.

Giovanni in Ireland was acted last night to a very thin house, for the second time; and although it has been somewhat shortened, and in some parts improved, still it is a piece only calculated to excite disgust and contempt. The music, and the vocal talents of the principal performers, save it from disapprobation in every part. Yet, there was scarcely a scene which was not loudly hissed as well as applauded; and at the conclusion, whilst MADAME VESTRIS was singing her last song, the feelings of many of the audience at the general stupidity of the piece, could not be repressed, but broke out tumultuously with cries of "off—off!" Madame Vestris appeared much offended, and abruptly left the Stage! We consider this conduct on her part as an apparent high insult to the public; and if she had not quickly returned prompted by a better feeling, there is no doubt but the audience would have marked their displeasure at the circumstance as strongly as they did their satisfaction, to see her so speedily correct herself. We certainly regret to find this very attractive lady, and so many other excellent performers, thrust into situations quite beneath their talents. The number of Orders issued were, we understand very great; but we think this bad system will soon work its own cure. The Manager must be conscious by this time that he cannot make any thing of Giovanni in Ireland; and the sooner he supplies its place with something worthy of his theatre, the sooner shall we have the pleasure of praising his efforts.

During the Extravaganza a person in the Pit got on one of the Benches and attempted to address the Audience but he was prevented by the officers in attendance.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE really feel it necessary, and consistent with our duty, to advise our readers (or such as in going to this Theatre are not wholly influenced by their expectations of amusement from the Pantomime alone) to restrain their curiosity, till that of the rabble has a little subsided; for shouting of "silence," "order," &c. and the many gross expressions which are often uttered, entirely preclude the possibility of deriving the least gratification from the first pieces, during which, at the expence of the head and of delicacy, the less vociferous part of the auditors are compelled to abide the fighting and squabbling of the multitudes assembled in the Galleries. We really think, that it is the imperative duty of the Managers to take some precaution against this encroachment upon the comforts of the rational part of the audience; and either open to the frequenters of the galleries when they are so over-full, the upper parts of the boxes which are in general empty, or admit into the former divisions a sufficient number only to fill them. The boxes were very indifferently attended, as might be expected from the above named cause. The music in The Two Gentlemen of Verona was scarcely heard; and at the conclusion of Miss Hallande's song, some gentleman in the upper regions, regaled the lovers of harmony, with an obligato accompaniment, from which Mr. Bishop might have received a hint. The fine duet previous to the Carnival was not audible, and the actors and singers perceiving the impossibility of calming the savage breasts of the enraged gods, enjoyed themselves while on the Stage with much apparent good humour. Some efforts should really be made to prevent a repetition of the annoyances. The Carnival was last night shortened by its two former concluding scenes—the Temple of the Muses, and the Duke's Garden in Milan. On the advantage which the spectacle derived from this, we shall not presume to offer an opinion. The pantomime excited considerable laughter and applause, it has been somewhat relieved from the tediousness it created on the first night, though it still is inferior to many similar productions on previous occasions. An accident which created much laughter, occurred in the fifth scene—the Head of the Giant who defended the Dwarf's Castle lost its balance before its time, and discovered underneath the smart face of a civilised being. The Pit was very full.

DRURY LANE.

The Manager has favored the public with the following paragraph in his play-bill.

“ Giovanni in Ireland, on its first Performance, last Night, was received with tumultuous approbation, Every factious effort, previously organized, being completely overpowered. The numerous communications on this subject that have been received, will in due time be brought before the Public. The Piece will be repeated every Evening till further Notice.”

We are quite at a loss to conjecture what faction it is whose organized efforts have been overpowered. Nor can we conceive what is the nature of the numerous communications received and to be produced. Perhaps the Harlequins and Clowns out of work, have laid their heads and legs together to hoot and kick Don Giovanni off that Stage which he has dared to occupy during their privileged Season. Really, this, if the case, is a matter of deep interest to the public at large; and we shall await with extreme anxiety the development of the tricks plotted against the Don. However, in this we may be wrong,—and judging from the heavy dialogue—dull incidents—the tedious Inflation Spectacle—and indifferent Scenery and Machinery displayed in Giovanni's Irish Adventures, it is possible some radical cause exists for the hostility evinced. It should not, therefore, surprise us very soon to be informed by authority, that the author, scene-painters, machinists, &c. &c. employed in this piece, have been detected in a factious conspiracy to bring down contempt on the management, degrade the music of certain delightful composers, and place certain favorites of the public in a ridiculous situation.

Thomas Baker Cox, Esq., of Soho Square, was the gentleman who was so rudely handled by the police officer, on Wednesday evening, in the Pit of Drury-Lane Theatre, for expressing his disapprobation at the performance of Giovanni in Ireland. It appears a most scandalous interference with the expression of public opinion.

DRURY LANE.

THIS Theatre is losing money by the continued performance of Giovanni in Ireland, which the Manager must be mad to rely on, after the decisive opinions against it expressed within the house by the uninfluenced part of the audience, and by the public press. We are, indeed, told in the play-bill that the piece is "received with tumultuous approbation," which is true as regards the great numbers who have been sent into the pit, galleries, and boxes, to support it, but not one word is said of the vehement opposition it meets with, except the term "factious efforts" be the new managerial distinctive name for the expression of adverse public opinion on the merits of a drama. This is, surely, most indecorous language to use towards those independent and impartial persons who are the best friends of the Managers and the British stage. Can it be supposed that a numerous body of persons of every class, scattered throughout the different parts of the theatre, could have "previously organized" a system of opposition to a miserable "Extravaganza Opera!" Common-sense ridicules the idea. If the Manager means to insinuate that the "factious efforts" are not directed against the Drama, but against the Installation Spectacle, in which the King is represented, and that it is a political feeling which occasions the nightly marks of disapprobation, we, in this case, must declare our utter disbelief of such a feeling being called up on the occasion, and state our great regret to see a Manager of one of our national theatres thus endeavour to convert the loyal into tools, to force on a very absurd play, and a tiresome, ineffective, spectacle.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Pit and Galleries of this Theatre were as numerously attended last night as on the previous one: nor, till the hour of half-price admittance, were the Gods so clamorous as before; owing probably to the more classic representation of The Exile being better understood by their refined minds, than the vulgar and uninteresting performance of one of Shakespeare's productions: but be the cause what it may, we were highly indebted to it, and with the exceptions of a few fights and scuffles, the house was tolerably quiet. The Dress Boxes were filled in the same proportion as on yesterday evening, the Upper Circles more indifferently so. The play was acted with more than usual eclat; and the coronation appeared to be very highly relished, nor had our representative at the Court of Russia, any reason to complain of disrespect towards his dignity at this general period of festivity.

Mrs, TENNANT appeared to suffer much from a cold which affected her voice.

Mrs. CHATTERLEY, in the absence of Miss FOOTE, acted Alexina, uncommonly well. She gave point to many passages, which, we must confess, we do not recollect her predecessor in the part to have impressed on us. She was much applauded.

We much wish that Mrs. Vining, who played Sedona (the mother of Alexina) in the Opera of The Exile, would study to divest herself of those disagreeable peculiarities which she possesses, both in voice and manner; the former is ever a plaintive whine, which (without its pleasing sensations) seems like the moaning whispers of December's blasts, while the latter appears rather an appeal to our charity and patience, than the natural expressions of character and judgment. This lady has another habit, which is not less disagreeable—in extending her arm, she invariably puts three fingers nearly out of joint, (as we should imagine, from the unnatural figures which they describe) while another is fastened to the palm of the hand, and produces an effect by no means graceful, but most displeasing to the eye. These latter are but trifles; yet, such as in the sustaining of inferior characters, bring on them attention and disgust: We are thus free with this lady's errors, because we deem her possessed of pretensions towards the office of utility. Mr. Young sustained his part in the play, with his usual success: though Daran is a character beneath an actor possessed of the legitimate talent which mark this gentleman's representations. Mr. W. Farren performed with much humour the old Governor of Siberia; and was extremely ludicrous in the duet with Altradoff; yet in this instance, the sacrifice of propriety, (even probability) to the production of effect, is alike unworthy of the talent of this performer. Custom may tolerate, judgment only should guide.

The Scenery in the Pantomime is very splendid, the Castle of Polished Steel (which by the bye, is not a very accurate resemblance of the object) is particularly beautiful.

COVENT GARDEN.

This Theatre, was on Saturday evening, about as well attended as on the preceding one: and as respectably; at least as regarded the higher visitors of the House, for the noise which issued from the Galleries, after they had been filled by the half-price gentry, was equal to any disturbance we had ever previously heard. The commencement of the Play suffered no intrusion, save the occasional illustrative remarks of a child about four years of age, who sat on its enraptured mama's knee, and favored the audience every three minutes, with some remark indicative of great precocity of mind; but which, unhappily, did not suit the unparental feelings of the majority of the audience, who once or twice bestowed upon the innocent offender (or rather on its less innocent parents) their marked censure, at this breach of decorum's rules. It would be useless to offer any remark upon the extreme absurdity of parents, who expose the follies of the nursery to the gaze of the public, by intruding on its comforts a child of four years of age, to witness a dramatic performance of Shakespeare's, followed by a harlequinade; this, and many more annoyances, have the prevailing custom of pantomimic representations laid on us. Miss Hallande and Mr. Abbott, in one or two instances, forgot the words of their respective characters, at which (considering the frequent repetition of their parts) we were rather surprised. By the bye, this gentleman, (Mr. Abbott) will we trust receive, with his coadjutor Mr. Liston, a hint some evening, to remind them of the respect due to their supporters, and that they are on the Stage to sustain for the gratification of the public, the characters written by their authors, and not play those of children and buffoons, for their own amusement. In the first scene of the third act, Mr. Liston concluded a speech, addressed to Valentine, with a snort, either we presume the subject of some Green Room joke, or intended, as usual to make his brother performers laugh, or "some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too." Mr. Abbott, on leaving the Stage, regaled the audience, with a few returning snorts, as we perceived him at the wing from the top of the House, to which we had returned at the conclusion of the second act, to examine the state of the audience. Mr. Pyne (from some cause, of which we are ignorant) did not sustain his part in the finale to the second act, which was sung by Messrs. Taylor, Tinney, and Miss Hallande.

DRURY LANE.

ON Saturday night Don Giovanni was kicked out of Ireland, never more to appear in that part of these kingdoms: if he is tolerated in London, he ought to be grateful for the favor, and be contented to seek no other place for the gratification of his absurd amatory pursuits. We can assure Mr. Moncrieff, to whom we are indebted for the honor of the Don's visit, that if he has any intention to introduce his hero on other ground, it will in all probability cause both him and his gay friend to endure some more of the pains of the infernal regions.

During the last performance of The Extravaganza it met throughout with its former proportion of applause and hisses, until the conclusion, when the neutrals shewed themselves in the ranks of opposition, and joined in the cry for the "Manager!" In consequence of which Mr. Elliston, after the farce had been commenced amidst the warring voices, at length made his appearance, attired as sovereign of the Order of St. Patrick:—he stated that the piece had been projected above two years ago, and written fifteen months; that the success attending Giovanni in London, and the popularity of Madame Vestris in that piece, were what induced the management to produce Giovanni in Ireland; that he knew too well his own interest to force any piece on his patrons the public against their wishes; and, therefore, he begged leave to announce that the Extravaganza was for the present withdrawn—on which he retired, and the Farce went on. The audience, however, did not seem satisfied with the term present, and a new uproar ensued, which at last brought Mr. Knight forward, who being made acquainted with the cause, intimated that the piece was entirely withdrawn, without the qualification of the term present. Great approbation was immediately expressed, and tranquillity immediately followed.

We are happy to find Mr. Elliston, thus ready to yield to the judgment of the public: and we have to thank him for the new and legitimate sources of entertainment his play-bill this day announces. He cannot fail by such means, eventually, to obtain an honorable and adequate support.

Mr. Wallack has met with a serious accident in America, having by a fall broke one of his legs.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE House was better attended last night, than on Saturday; and noisy in proportion. The clamour which commenced at the end of the second act, we cannot find language more capable of describing, than in those lines of Pope's translation:—

" But when the gods, descending, swelled the fight, Then tumult rose, fierce rage, and pale affright."

A regular set-to took place on the left of the one shilling gallery, and about half a dozen of the dirtiest looking fellows we ever beheld, dealt around them with the greatest rage,—thus they amused themselves during the early part of the first scene in the third act, until the interference of the surrounding spectators, separated the combatants, and the performers calmed their fury. As the curtain at the conclusion of the second act was lowering, it struck off the high feathered cap of one of Elizabeth's guard, and was near laying its wearer prostrate in the presence of his imperial mistress. One half of Johnny Gilpin's house was (for the sake of variety, we presume) introduced in the Siberian city of Tobolsk. The pantomime went off with its usual eclat.

The first piece to-night is the Opera of Rob Roy, and in it, Miss Tree and Mr. Macready, sustain the characters of Diana Vernon, and the bold hero, Macgregor. The Opera intrinsically, and from its associations, is calculated to excite considerable interest; the music is admirably chosen, and well adapted; and the airs (though familiar to almost every ear) are such as in each repetition infuses "new melody into the soul." Miss Tree's powers are admirably calculated to give effect to the soft, yet wild simplicity of the Highland airs; and by her superior talents as an actress, she will inspire the dramatic character of Diana Vernon, with a prominence of sentiment, which though attached to the part, will be rather novel as respects its former representations. Miss Stephens was announced for this character, but having been nearly shipwrecked on her return from the continent, we presume that she has not yet sufficiently recovered to resume her duties. We trust that Mr. Liston in the Baillie to night, will not sacrifice propriety of character to "broad humour," or in other terms, grimace; nor, deprive the audience of the gratification of hearing without intrusion, the delightful air of "Auld Lang Syne." This gentleman is infinitely beneath himself, when he condescends to be beneath his character.

DRURY LANE.

In our thirty-second number, we noticed the same performances as were exhibited here last night—namely, The Busy Body, The Coronation, and A Day after the Wedding. The only difference in the cast of characters yesterday evening, was that of Colonel Freeclove, in the latter piece, being represented by Mr. Penley, instead of Mr. Russell; a change which was an improvement; for although Mr. Penley has not all the qualifications requisite for the part, yet he possesses a greater share of them than the other gentleman, who made a perfect burlesque character of the Colonel.

We regret that the House was not so well attended as could be desired when a good Comedy is performed.

We have received from some of our Subscribers, comments on our last paragraph, under the head, "Drury Lane," in our yesterday's paper. They remark, that, considering the conduct of Mr. Elliston, in endeavouring to trick the public into applause, or to dragoon them into submission, during the run of Giovanni in Ireland, they are surprised we should pay him a compliment for withdrawing that piece, in obedience to the forcible demand of the audience. In reply, we beg to observe, that what we said related to the ready yielding of the Manager to an entire withdrawal of the Extravaganza, after the expression of "for the present," was objected to in a manner that shewed him the opinion of the public was against the possibility of any alterations rendering the piece palatable to them.

In common with every one who read the charge by the Manager against some part of his audiences, of being prompted in their opposition by a "factious" spirit, we retain our feelings of surprise and indignation; and we demand of Mr. Elliston, in the name of an offended public—the promised production of "THE NUMEROUS COMMUNICATIONS" which are the asserted proofs of "PREVIOUSLY ORGANIZED" efforts to overthrow the long trumpeted Giovanni in Ireland.

COVENT GARDEN.

ERE we commence our task of criticism upon the performances of yesterday evening, we must reiterate the censures which we bestowed upon the conduct of the Managers in permitting the comforts of the majority, and certainly the respectable portion of their nightly supporters, to be assailed by the noise and fighting in the overful upper gallery. To propose the rejection of the money of those individuals who applied for their admission after the several divisions of the Theatre had been filled, we fear would make the Treasurer of this and of similar establishments, bestow a smile of ineffable contempt upon the ignorant politician who should offer such a plan,—nor (save as a last resource) should we desire it, but more consideration is surely due from the Managers to the frequenters of their houses. Has any consideration been evinced?—The disturbance which nightly takes place, precludes all possibility of deriving the least enjoyment from the entertainments, the seeing which becomes a labour, not a pleasure. The point resolves itself to this:—it is the duty of the Managers to make every attempt in their power to prevent the ease and comforts of their chief upholders, from being encroached upon by a turbulent, sixpenny rabble. If they (the Managers) do not choose to reject any money offered, why not open the slips which are always vacant? Or does the infringement of a custom excite greater reluctance than the conviction that three fourths of their nightly attenders leave the theatres with a head-ache and disgust? Though in our duty to our readers we are uninfluenced by any consideration, save justice, yet enjoying the freedom of Covent Garden House, we should not feel ourselves warranted in giving vent, while in the Theatre, to the censure which this pitiful policy would create; but we certainly think that the Managers are not acting wisely nor respectfully. We should (save under the above named circumstances) have derived considerable gratification from the opera of Rob Roy last night; though we do not agree with the conception of the character of the Highland chieftain which Mr. Macready appears to have imbibed: nor, after depicting the outlines of that gentleman's performance, will many arguments be required to prove how little it assimilates with the records of the hero on history's or fiction's page. The Rob Roy of Mr. Macready's imagination is—a solemn, sententious, GENTLEMAN, possessed of more tragical refinement, than of the bold pride of nature; and more cultivation by the rules, than by the effects of society—there are not the shades, the tints of character which present to the spectator the variety of aspects, that fickle nature oft assumes; and Rob, though a man of keen feelings, was more the bold, careless, independent foundling of Society, than the cold tragedian of its higher walks. Miss Tree, did not execute the music of Diana Vernon, with that effect which we had anticipated—she substituted “O say not Woman’s heart” for “Had it been my humble lot,” and, though rather inclined to be unharmonious, displayed in it delightful taste. In the song of “A Highland lad” she was encored, but had not strength of voice to give it due effect. The duet to the air of “Ye Barks” she sang with much sweetness. Mr. Duruset, did infinite justice to the character of Frank. Mr. Listen, adhered closer to the text than he usually does. The Pit and Galleries were quite full; the Boxes indifferently attended. Miss Tree, left out her verse in the finale to the Play.

DRURY LANE.

Last night, The Dramatist, with The Coronation, and Giovanni in London, were performed to a very thin house, except as to the Galleries, which were crammed full of holiday-foiks. At first price there was not above thirty-five pounds in the Pit, and the Boxes were hardly filled in the first row. The Comedy was acted with much spirit, but frequently in a manner best calculated to amuse the unsophisticated sons and daughters of humble industry nearest the ceiling, who were mightily amused with Vapid, Old Scratch, and Ennui. The Coronation, still forms an attraction, which proves the immense number of strangers that are continually pouring into this metropolis, although, certainly, there are many residents who at this season visit the Theatres, that seldom can afford to do so at other periods. MADAME VESTRIS, as Giovanni in London, met with better applause than for the last week attended her Donship in Ireland.

We hope, however, we are not to be much longer annoyed with this Extravaganza, which would do very well once or twice in a year, but really has been seen so often, that any charm it at first possessed is now lost to the numerous body of frequenters of the Theatre.

MORTON’S Comedy of Secrets Worth Knowing, is to be acted to-night: we noticed the last performance of this witless piece in our 46th number. The two best drawn characters are April and Sally. On the last occasion we derived much pleasure from Mr. Munden’s representation of the former character, and Mrs. Edwin’s lively and humorous acting in the latter. Comedy is, in general, excellently performed here.

COVENT GARDEN.

We feel happy in informing our readers that the audiences at this Theatre rather increase than diminish, notwithstanding the frequent repetition of the performances. Though often erroneously employed, a most liberal policy guides the arrangements of this House: neither expence nor assiduity appear to lag in sullen pace in the production of new pieces, &c. If the efforts of the Managers were directed to the revival of legitimate taste, and not to the gratification of pleasures unworthy of the mind, we fear not but that the genius of the Drama would raise once more her drooping brow, and call on justice to reward her patrons. The Managers may shelter beneath the protecting words of a Johnson, and with him exclaim—

" Ah! let not censure term our fate, our choice,
The stage but echoes back the people's voice;
The Drama's laws, the Drama's patrons give,
For we, that live to please, must please to live."

Yet even this will not suffice in palliation of their laxity of taste; nor are the following lines (the conclusion of the same prologue) unapt to our purpose:—

" 'Tis yours this night to bid the reign commence
Of rescued nature, and reviving sense;
To chase the charms of sound—the pomp of show,
For useful mirth, and salutary woe;
Bid scenic Virtue form the rising age,
And Truth diffuse her radiance from the stage."

The Theatre was last night extremely full.—The gods did not begin their usual vociferations 'till the commencement of half-price; from which time it was hide and seek with the performers. The glee "Who is Sylvia" rather resembled a catch than any other style of composition, as it was impossible for the musicians to hear—even themselves.

A gentleman in the upper Gallery, favored Miss Tree and Miss Halland, by joining with them in the duet previous to the Carnival while a friend, we presume, relieved the monotony of certain scenes, by a very faithful imitation of the melodious notes of a cock; not a note of "Should he upbraid" could be distinguished, and "Go it Jerry" was the chorus substituted. This is really vile, but we trust that with the conclusion of the Christmas holidays, these intrusions will cease. We would recommend to Mr. Abbott, a re-perusal of the character of Proteus. The duet part in the finale, has been with much good taste omitted.

Miss Stephens appears on Monday evening as Polly, in the Beggar's Opera: and we very much regret to perceive Miss Halland, announced for the character of Captain Macheath!! But more of this anon.

To-morrow HAMLET. Hamlet, Mr. Young, Ophelia, Miss M. Tree.

DRURY LANE,

The attendance here was better, as regards the Pit, than the previous evening. The Comedy of Secrets worth Knowing, was acted as effectively as so indifferent a piece could well be. The great fault of it lies in the weakness of the plot, and the forced and unnatural characters of most of the dramatis personæ. Mr. Elliston is entertaining as Rostrum—yet he does not look the part. The other chief supporters of this Play, were Mr. Moxon as April, Mr. HARLEY as Plethora, Mr. KNIGHT as Nicholas, and Mrs. EDWIN as Sally, who greatly amused the holiday-makers.

We have to remark on Mr. Knight's usual mode of performing Joey in that most bright interlude, in the Coronation. This gentleman has for ninety-four times played this important part, and each time, except last evening, has he been encored in the miserable song he gives, and as regularly has a person been planted in the Pit, on the opposite side to that where he sings, with orders to call out, "this side—this side!" on which with most punctual obedience to the wishes of his friend, Mr. Joey trets round and makes a very gracious rustic obeisance to intimate his grateful compliance with the desire expressed that his countenance might be closely inspected on all sides. This mummery, we can assure Mr. Knight has long been observed, and has caused infinite disgust. But the matter has never been deemed worthy much attention, as those who have once seen the Coronation generally walk out, or dose through it, as well as the noisy rabble behind the scenes, and the drums and trumpets will permit. We greatly admire this gentleman in many characters, yet he must excuse our notice of any little tricks he may use to ingratiate himself with the audience: these arts are always as evident as they are contemptible, and he possesses abundant powers of attraction without their aid.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE unwise and unsuccessful attempt of the Managers of the Drury Lane Theatre, in the production of so puerile and absurd an entertainment as Giovanni in Ireland, must prove materially injurious to the interests of that house; by the immediate loss of the sum expended on the piece—the indifferent attendances, which have followed its condemnation, and that arise from the want of the novelty so requisite to attract at such a period as the present; and the feeling which the public must necessarily have imbibed from Mr. Elliston's impolitic, and we may say, contemptible mode of promoting its success. The errors committed at that Theatre have proved highly beneficial to the interests of Covent Garden, as they have preponderated its scale of attraction, by throwing into it the greater proportion of theatrical visitors at this season—the lovers of pantomime representations. We should blush to entertain a sentiment of gratification at the great success of the one House, arising from the misfortunes of the other; but we nevertheless think, that Mr. Elliston with justice incurs the penalty he is now suffering, when he so far forgets his duties to the public, as the director of their amusements: and we trust, that a more cautious and noble policy, will date its existence from his recent experience; and that Managers, will abandon for the future the somewhat stale trick of gulling their supporters by the gilded attractions of children's play-things, and the public (or such a portion of them as yet retain the principles of good taste) will henceforth re-assume the privileges of the guardians of the Drama and the Stage. Covent Garden Theatre, was last night extremely well attended; and owing to the upper Gallery not being quite full, its inmates were more quiet. Miss Foote still continues ill, we presume, as Mrs. Chatterley sustained her character in The Evil. The performances received their usual meed of applause; and in the pantomime, Grimaldi's trick of swallowing the eggs appeared to gratify the gods excessively. Mr. Meadows should really receive a few lessons from one of the orchestra musicians: for though in the character of Baron Altradoff any great exertion of his singing powers is not perhaps requisite, it would be infinitely more pleasing, could he give utterance to such notes in his part of the duet with the Governor as would make it less discordant than it is in general.

To-night the Tragedy of Hamlet is to be performed, with the novel attraction of Miss Tree's Ophelia; from the melodious sweetness of the music, and this lady's acting talents, we anticipate much pleasure from her performance of the character.

DRURY LANE.

The Comedy of The Busy Body, was acted here last night, in the most entertaining style, but did not attract an audience proportioned to its merits, and the comic talents of the chief performers in it. After The Coronation, the laughable Farce of Fortune's Frolic, was played; Robin Roughhead, by Mr. KNIGHT. He made the House merry with his ludicrously natural performance of the lucky country lad. Mr. HUGHES acted Snacks. This gentleman is generally very attentive to give a respectable air to the little parts assigned him—we think, however, he should be somewhat ambitious of greater prominence, as he has qualities that might gradually place him in a higher rank. What a pity it is that Mr. THOMSON, who represented Frank, does not take lessons in elocution. He has a tolerable figure, and understands his business—but his tones!—Oh!

Mr. KEAN will return on Monday next from his provincial tour, on which evening he is to perform the DUKE OF GLOSTER.

---

This Theatre stands in need of some novelty in the after-pieces. The half-price, lately, has been no aid to the treasury of any consequence. Modern dramatic authors of talent, are not, however, much courted; and so we suppose we must put up with the works of the old ones.

---

Since our manuscript was sent to the printer, we have received a very gentlemanly and sensitive letter from Mr. Knight, of Drury Lane Theatre, relative to our remarks on him in yesterday's number. Want of space prevents an immediate reply, which we feel it our duty to that gentleman and our readers to give in our next.

COVENT GARDEN.

HAMLET was performed here yesterday evening to a numerous audience, amongst whom we recognised the Duke of Montrose, &c.

Mr. Young acted the Prince of Denmark in as impressive a manner as the holiday-people would permit. Miss M. Tree interestingly represented the fair Ophelia—but for the above reason her efforts were greatly obscured. However, we cannot omit to remark that she did not give the songs with the requisite simplicity of style. Ornament in the singing of a maniac is entirely out of character.

DRURY LANE,

CUMBERLAND'S comedy of the Jew was acted here, last night, to a thin house, which poor attendance we would fain ascribe to the inclemency of the weather. Mr. ELLISTON'S Sheva, and Mr. KNIGHT'S Jabal, were very well performed.

Mr. PENLEY, Mr. BARNARD, and Mr. POWELL, were highly respectable in their several characters: and Miss SMITHSON looked delightful, and acted very appropriately.

We took occasion, in our Paper of Thursday last, to mention what appeared to us an understanding between Mr. Knight, of Drury Lane Theatre, and some person stationed in the pit during the performances of the Coronation Interlude, whereby an artful effect in favor of Mr. Knight seemed to us, and many others, to be aimed at. We have, in consequence of our remarks, received a letter from the above-named gentleman, which we now insert; considering it in some respects creditable to himself, and necessary to the comprehending our reply.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE THEATRICAL OBSERVER.

"SIR,

In your Paper of this morning, you have been pleased to remark that for the first time during the run of the Coronation, the Song given by me failed of repetition, and that a Person is regularly planted in the Pit with orders to call out—"this side," &c.

"I have little to observe on the first point, further than to correct an error, last evening being the seventh failure of the Song: but that a gentleman should deem it necessary to hold a professional man up to marked ridicule, by accusing him of an action as contemptible as impossible, induces me to comment more at large upon the injustice of the censure.

"Can you, Sir, think so meanly of human nature, as to suppose that two individuals could be found answering your description—the one planting—the other consenting to be planted, for a purpose so degrading? I feel assured when you put the question, your better reason will answer in the negative—for my own part I should despise myself, could I say even to my nearest relative—give me your support, or even hint to the same effect. Wholesome criticism is the Actor's best friend; and to point out errors, with a view of conveying instruction, ought at all times to be respected, but tempered indeed must be the mind that could sit down unmoved, when the vehicle of such instruction be couched in epithets—"infinitely disgusting"—"contemptible," &c. &c.—did you know me, you would at once withdraw an attack so altogether unmerited.

"An intercourse between the Actor and the Audience I hold as the death of abstraction, and all the way from the purpose of the Stage; to avoid this evil has been one of my principal studies, and I can affirm most conscientiously that during the time I am before the Public, (whatever my appearance may declare to the contrary) I never could go out of my character for the pitiful purpose of tricking my patrons of applause—with this rigid observance is it not painful to be made the scoff of the ignorant? to be unjustly reported, and placarded from East to West?—Were you, Sir, in my situation, you would feel as I do the cruelty of such an exposition.

"You are perfectly correct as to the badness of the song, but I am compelled to sing it—notwithstanding, should a repetition in future be called for, I will go direct to the other side, in order to remove what you consider offensive.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant.

EDWARD KNIGHT."

January 3, 1822.

If out of ninety-four performances of The Coronation there were seven failures of the song, instead of one, as we mentioned, our readers will, we are sure, acquit us of any great blame for that mistake, as it is really a hardship to be compelled to see such a spectacle even two or three times. Yet by this statement Mr. Knight admits that eighty-seven times he was encored, and went, of course, eighty-seven times regularly through the crossing ceremony at the suggestion of an individual in the pit. Now surely this was the very death-wound of "abstraction," which our good friend Mr. Knight might by putting his "study" in practice have easily avoided on the third or fourth night of the spectacle by at once going to the opposite side of the Stage, to where he first gave the song. But as he did not pursue that obvious method to avoid the call from the Pit, it was most natural to suppose that if he did not originate, he acceded to the manœuvre of a friend, either of his own, of the author of the Song, or of the Manager, instigated to bolster up by his popularity, the wretched trash that disgraces the excellent cause it advocates. No one will believe that a man would go night after night to see the Coronation, paying his money, and losing his time, unless there was an object foreign from spontaneous and just support. We now consider Mr. Knight as fully acquitted by his assertions of participating in this folly. But we still can think sufficiently "meanly of human nature to suppose that two individuals can be found answering our description—the one planting—the other consenting to be planted for a purpose so degrading," as the upholding of loyalty, at the cost of common-sense.

DRURY LANE,

ON Saturday night no part of the Theatre was well filled, although Mr. Elliston, Mr. Munden, Mr. Knight, and Mr. Harley, together with Mrs. Edwin, combined their highly comic powers to make the humorous, but absurd Comedy of Secrets worth Knowing, thoroughly amusing, and although the laugh—compelling Farce of Modern Antiques, was excellently represented with the aid of the last four, of the above named Performers. It is difficult to fully account for the poor attendance on such an evening—the weather was fine—the season one of enjoyment, the pieces well known; and they were from that very circumstance likely to attract by their liveliness.

It is truly discouraging to the Manager to find some of his best efforts thus neglected by the Public. Comedy at this house is in fact represented in a much superior manner to Tragedy; as in the former almost every character is filled by a first-rate Performer in his particular line, whereas in the latter there are scarcely more than one or two representatives of principal parts, that can pretend to any-thing like excellence. Mr. Kean, no doubt, is a host in himself; and Miss Edmiston is bursting into general notice, a candidate for the Siddonian chair; but what complete satisfaction can they give to those who look for the full effect of a drama at the hands of all who have a part in representing it? It is evident that some very powerful stimulus to public curiosity is the only thing that can bring hither numerous audiences. Novelty attended with sterling merit, appears to us the only chance of reviving affairs here; for, however attractive Spectacle has proved to be for a time, we cannot recommend a further deterioration of public taste in this way. Mr. Elliston, we would fain believe, is beginning to be convinced that the liberal encouragement of dramatic talent, and of histrionic genius, is the surest foundation for his future success. If he aims exclusively at this means of attraction, he will merit the support of every friend of the British Stage; and it would well become the leaders of taste and fashion, by their example, to conduct hither the other ranks of society to maintain the cause of Genius, and render it triumphant over empty, noisy, tinsel-decked folly, which may occupy for its hour the eye or the ear, but sends us home without a single reflection worthy an intellectual being.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE success of this Theatre rather increases than abates, and Saturday evening proved again propitious to the interest of the treasury: the pit and galleries were very full, and the boxes more numerous attended, than that division of the house has lately been. The entertainments produced their usual meed of applause, and Miss Hallande sang her first song infinitely better than we have for some time heard: she did not appear to labour in the manner she was wont to do; and there was a more softened expression in the tones of her voice, than usually mark them. By the bye, we trust that Mr. Abbott received no serious injury from his ankle coming in contact with his sword, which, on the rescue of Silvia he had let fall to the ground. This Gentleman should, really, be extremely cautious of how he ventures his person with missile weapons:—there is a natural furor of action and sentiment about him when upon the stage, which if not tempered by prudence, may place him in more imminent danger than a real encounter with his assumed opponents.

The Lovers of Music are this evening to be regaled by the performance of the Beggars Opera, in which Miss Stephens resumes her professional duties on our London boards: the excellence of this Lady in the character of Polly is too generally known to need our anticipating remarks; but it is with regret, that we divest our thoughts of a subject on which they so pleasingly dwell, and fix them on another which creates a sentiment less pleasing, we mean the indelicate, unwise, and cruel conduct of the Managers in putting Miss Hallande into the character of Captain Macheath!! Does Miss Stephens' fame rest on so slender a foundation, that the part of Polly only could be selected for her debut, when that selection could only be made by the sacrifice of the feelings of another, and of strict modesty? Have the Managers so long upheld the cause of the legitimate drama, that they can now with impunity encroach upon that of decency? Has the public so ill rewarded them through the commencement of the season, that they are compelled as a last resort, to hold up as an attraction (or as a combination of attraction) the sacrificed feelings of an amiable lady? And sacrificed in what manner? not to the act alone of dimming with the breath of partial immodesty the brightest jewel in fair virtue's breast, but by placing her in a character, which in itself, excites repugnance and disgust! Miss Hallande we highly respect and admire; to her, therefore, personally, we direct not our observations; but if there are not some few who will exercise their sense, and teach the Managers their duty to the public, and to the performers—the power of criticism yields its functions, and expires.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Beggars Opera was last night performed at this Theatre to a very numerous audience, and created a most general sentiment of delight. The applause which greeted the return of our much deserving favorite Miss Stephens, was warm and lengthened, tho' we cannot refrain from observing, that as we are well acquainted with theatricals, we would willingly have dispensed with the sighing, heavings and alarm, which appeared to express a sentiment Miss Stephens neither does, nor is required to feel: her fame is founded on her merits; those merits are superior to all such adventitious aid, and the lady has trodden the boards too long, to feel those emotions which call upon the pity of an audience when expressed on the entré of a Novice. But we with pleasure leave this subject, to enter on another more according with our feelings. We think we never heard Miss Stephens in better voice than last night; and the effect which she produced, by means so fraught with sweetness and with nature, were more powerfully felt than we have powers to describe; the air "But he so teased me," she sang THrice; and varying her style in each repetition, left the judgment in doubt upon the one for its selection, while the feelings acknowledged no sentiment save unalloyed delight. It would be an endless task to seek the points, which like meteors in the heavens shone brightest 'midst the bright; her looks and acting spoke her in perfect health.

Miss Hallande, (the Captain Macheath,) acted with a great deal of vivacity and spirit, and in her appearance honoured the sex whose garb she had assumed. The song of "if the heart of a man is depressed with cares," she sang with much taste; but we cannot compliment her upon the general execution of the music; the exertion in singing under which this lady appears to labour, very much offends the eye and ear, and she was often in the course of the Opera most unharmonious; the songs in the character of Macheath, are not calculated for a female's voice, and tho' we repine at exercising the pen of criticism on the performance, the temerity of the Managers (and we may say the Lady.) in some measure demands it. Why is Mrs. Liston put into such a part as Lucy?—is there no other singer in the Theatre,?—'twas a burlesque. We regret that the bad judgment of the law-givers should compel us to make unpleasant remarks upon their law receivers, but 'tis a duty we must discharge. Messrs. Blanchard and Emery, were excellent, as Peachum and Locket. Mr. Comer, made a very indifferent part of a very good one,—Filch.

The DUKE of YORK was in the Theatre.

DRURY LANE,

Richard the Third was represented here last night, when Mr. KEAN resumed his duties as Glo'ster, and gave the points in which he is most happy, the usual effect. Although we admire this gentleman's peculiar talent, we cannot accord to him our entire satisfaction at his enactment of any character we have seen him in. He is not equal in sustaining the sentiment and the passion of his author,—he either sinks into tameness, or rises to sublimity of voice, look, and gesture. In the first instance, he appears, almost, below mediocrity; and in the latter he seems gifted with surprising genius. We are alternately reduced to indifference, or elevated to the most intense delight and astonishment at his acting. This certainly is not the mode of conveying a full delineation of character, which is further weakened by the peculiarities that fix attention more upon the actor than the person represented. Surely it is in Mr. Kean's power to throw around the inferior parts a proportionate effect and importance to what belongs to the higher emanations. It is said, however, that he has adopted the system of under acting to make his great efforts the more striking,—if so, it is a dangerous method of attaining fame, which should rather be sought through a channel that will not readily admit of the attacks of the envious or the cynical.

The way in which some of the other characters in the Tragedy were filled up, may be the best this Theatre can afford; but we are at all events certain it is not inferior to the most entertaining Barn Company that ever murdered Shakspeare. It is disgraceful to Drury to see Buckingham, Richmond, and Catesby setting people in a titter at their sing-song, drawling elocution.

The Farce of The Devil to Pay, with Mr. MUNDEN, as Jobson, and Miss KELLY, as Nell, was highly amusing.

The Pit and Galleri's were quite full,—the Dress-Boxes nearly so,—the other parts almost empty.

COVENT GARDEN.

"Soup for breakfast.—Soup for dinner,—and Scup for supper!"
The Two Gentlemen of Verona.—The Exile,—and the Pantomime!
We have to announce to our readers, the repetition of the first of those three pieces to a very numerous audience last night; who, in the course of the entertainments, exhibited many traits of youthful, and of grey hair'd folly; for the most trifling efforts at humour, failed not to create extreme delight, while Cleopatra's gally produced as loud acclamations as e're were uttered from the shores of Cydnus. We very much regretted to observe, that Miss Tree appeared to labour under indisposition,—the smiles which usually play'd around her cheeks had fled their sanctuary, and in their stead sat brooding melancholy; while the tones (which we were wont to listen to with such delight), seemed life-departing sighs from saintly lips. Her song of "Should he upbraid," was left out, as was that Lady's verse in the finale. Sincerely as we regret the cause,—it was the duty of the Managers to make some intimation of it to the Audience. There were some persons in the Theatre extremely troublesome,—one was amusing himself by an imitation of the notes of some favorite bird; while the other, sang a stave of "Garry Owen," as an accompaniment to a duet.

The Comedy of Errors is the chief attraction of this evening. This Play was very judiciously selected by the Managers, to introduce such improvements, as were likely to render it pleasing to the modern taste of theatrical admirers. And happy have been the introductions,—for in no piece is science more delightfully blended with the sweetest harmony. Many doubts reasonably exist, with regard to the alleged authorship of the Comedy of Errors, a mere perusal of which (by an individual but slightly acquainted with Shakspeare's style and excellences) will confirm. The plot of the play is beyond measure inconsistent, for, presuming that resemblances so exact as are stated to have been between the Dromios' and Antipholis' should have existed, the similarity of dress, is an incident most improbable. The play in some parts bears evident traces of its presumed great Masters' pen; but in the more general ones, is infinitely below his genius.

DRURY LANE,

We are promised a dramatic version of the new Novel of The Pirate, at this House, on Saturday next. It is amusing to see how the managerial caterers of our theatrical entertainments watch the issuing of these northern tales, and pounce on the proof-sheets smuggled out of the Printer's Office, then fly with them to some poor author with orders to cut out and string the dialogue, compress the characters and story, and bring the denouement to a proper dramatic form. Mr. Composer is next called on, and told that he must be pleased to select a few sheets of music,—a little paint is then directed to be applied to some old groves, rocks, and huts, and the sea ordered to be fresh darned; the dress-room is ransacked, and tailors made to devote day and night, altering and turning the old clothes found there. "OH DAY and NIGHT, but this is wondrous strange!" Well, in a week all must be ready for rehearsal, as in another week the Piece must be produced, for the cry is "the devil take the hindmost," so helter-skelter they all go to work,—the author scribbles and cuts,—the composer visits old music shops,—Daub flourishes his brush,—Snip holds erudite consultations with the acting Manager about costume, whilst he shakes off the dust from moth-eaten jerkins. At length the day is fixed for this effort of genius to see the light, and the Play-Bills announce the whole in the pompous terms—of "new music, scenery, machinery, dresses, and decorations,"—whilst rumour spreads with prompting correctness, that the Author is Mr. HACKWELL the celebrated putter-together of sundry never-to-be-forgotten dramas!

It is but proper, however, to mention that we are informed on good authority, that Covent Garden Theatre does not participate in this post-haste rivalry about The Pirate, which we understand is confined to the Minor Theatres, and—and—it choakes us—to Drury.

It is delightful to those who relish genuine comic acting to witness Mr. Munden, Mr. Elliston, Mr. Harley, Mr. Knight, Mrs. Edwin, &c., all placed together in situations where their several admirable powers are called into action. Secrets worth Knowing, again afforded, last night, an opportunity of high entertainment to a respectable audience.

We recommend to our Readers who have not seen Miss EDMISTON'S performance of Lady Macbeth, to attend this Theatre to-night, and we think they may receive a degree of satisfaction in this part which has not been felt for a long period.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS Theatre was last night extremely well attended, tho' The Comedy of Errors had fewer charms to attract the frequenters, than had The Two Gentlemen of Verona on the previous evening. As we were entering the House our eyes were assailed with the dolorous sight of an apologising bill; which stated, that Miss Tree had laboured under severe indisposition during her performance of the character of Julia on Tuesday evening, and, that tho' extremely desirous of sustaining the part for which she was announced for last night, she felt so unwell as to be incapable of doing so: Miss Love had accordingly kindly undertaken to perform in her stead. It was with much regret that we read this, tho' not without in some measure having anticipated it, for (as we stated in our number of yesterday) Miss Tree betrayed evident symptoms of severe indisposition during her performance on Tuesday evening.

Though to Miss Stephens' vocal powers we know not how to yield the full meed of approbation, of her talents as an actress we regret that we cannot speak so praisingly: and it is singular that a lady who is capable of conveying such varying, yet such powerful expressions, and of producing sensations on the various passions as strong as are effected by the influence of language or gesture, should seem so perfectly listless in describing (out of her peculiar sphere) the slightest shades of character. Adriana requires the talent of an actress to render her justly conspicuous, and such she was not yester-even. A very fine song in the fifth act (the words of which were not distinguishable) was encored, amidst a combination of sounds produced by applause, hisses, and vociferations of shame shame, the two latter arising from a feeling of consideration for Miss Stephens' unusual exertions. Miss Love played the part of Luciana with much credit. The Dromios of Messrs. Farren and Liston were inimitable, and produced the greatest delight. Mr. Duruset performed his Antipholis with much spirit; but we beg leave to point out to him an error which he committed in the denouement scene;—to produce (as it appeared) a certain effect, incompatible with propriety, upon being interrogated by his then unknown Father, he replied twice with all the flippancy and humour of a low Comedian "I never saw

You in my life till now;—the tone of voice with which this was expressed, rather savoured of the fool than of the sensitive man, who addressed a prisoner on his path to execution.

DRURY LANE,

It is with great pleasure we state that this House, last night, presented a profitable aspect. The Pit was crammed full; the Galleries were equally so; and the Dress and First-Circle Boxes were numerous and genteely attended. The attraction (to the honour of this Audience be it said) was not founded on an idle affection for gaudy spectacle, but on a just taste for the superior drama, and a desire to witness the eminent talent displayed by Mr. Kean as Macbeth, and Miss Edmiston as Lady Macbeth. The former has been too often seen in that character to require much description of his manner of representing it. Wherever there is an opening for deep or pointed expression, there Mr. Kean succeeds most amply. Miss Edmiston has, as yet, only been seen in two characters,—Jane Shore, and Lady Macbeth: to these she has given a truth and force of delineation that stamps her a first-rate actress. Last night she performed the ambitious and remorseless Lady Macbeth with increased effect, and received frequent ardent testimonies of approbation from the audience. She is an important acquisition to this Theatre, and cannot fail if her future characters are properly selected, to be a powerful assistant in drawing to this House the fashionable and judicious admirers of the Drama. Mr. COOPER acted Macduff with energy and correctness,—his voice appeared less, even than usual, at his command, in consequence of his late indisposition.

The laughable Farce of The Review followed. Mr. Fitzwilliam played the Irishman, but he has an English smack in his brogue which brings us as much to the recollection of cockneys, as of bog-trotters. Many hearty laughs rewarded Mr. Knight for his humourous representation of the Yorkshireman John Lump; and also Mr. Harley for his rattling Catch Quot'em. The Audience went away in apparent high good humour, although there was no Pantomime nor Procession!

Many complaints having been made of the irregularity with which Subscribers have been served, we beg to state that those instances arose from the extensive number of persons who have recently sent orders, but such arrangements have been made, as will in future prevent recurrence of those inattentions.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE do not suppose that this establishment ever enjoyed a greater tide of prosperity, than that which at present marks its course. The Theatre was last night excessively full, even the upper tier of Boxes (or rather the Second-Circle) being more than half filled, and the Pit, Galleries, and the Dress and Second Boxes were at half-price completely so. The success of this season has been produced at (comparatively speaking) a most trifling expence,—The Exile, and The Two Gentlemen of Verona,—having been the foundations of it; which success, with the sum of ten thousand guineas received at the commencement of this campaign,—Five thousand from a Mr. Ball, of Portland-Place, and five thousand from Lady Holland, for the additional Private Boxes,—must make the treasury of this House in a most flourishing condition. Sincerely do we rejoice at this, though we would that our gratification was unalloyed; and notwithstanding the profuse manner in which Fortune has bestowed her favours, we would hint to the Managers, that she is at best but a fickle Goddess, nor will the same snares even entangle her,—of which the present ill success of Drury is a sufficient proof. Were the business conductors therefore to study their real interest (duty we will put out of the question, for that, like most virtues, is admitted by all—followed by few.) they would not satiate the public taste too much with their present exhibitions; but having, like able Generals, foraged their troops with much success, they should draw them from their quarters to more general ones, when dearth and the enemy approach.

Mrs. FOOTE, last night, resumed her professional duties, after an illness which had for some time deprived her of the power of sustaining her usual characters. Of her recovery of her looks it would be difficult to judge, as the lights and the paint which the performers are compelled to use render the colour artificial, but her acting admitted not of the supposition that her health was much impaired. Mr. YOUNG performed with his usual success, and force, and was most warmly received.

We greatly regret that Miss TREE has not sufficiently recovered from her indisposition to support her character of Julia, in The Two Gentlemen of Verona, this evening, we would say we know not who could be endured as her substitute—but Mrs. Boyle is so adventurous as to attempt the part!

DRURY LANE,

LAST Night Secrets Worth Knowing, was performed with excellent effect, and was followed by The Coronation, and Monsieur Tomson.

This Evening Othello is acted. It is generally allowed to be one of Shakspear's happiest effusions: the character of the Moor is drawn with a masterly hand, and developed most naturally with the progress of the events originating in Iago's villainous deception. When urged by the latter to go in and avoid Desdemona's raised father and friends, his lofty spirit is briefly shewn in his reply:

Not I: I must be found;
My parts, my title, and my perfect soul,
Shall manifest me rightly.—

Then his love for the gentle Desdemona, how forcibly is it expressed on their meeting, in these lines:

I cannot speak enough of this content,
It stops me here; it is too much of joy;
And this,—and this,—(kissing her) the greatest discords be,
That e'er our hearts shall make!

The openness of his own nature, made him prone to consider frankness of manner in others as the proof of virtuous sincerity,—yet when by Iago's arts he is tardily taught to doubt his wife's affection, his whole mind is perverted, the avenues to judgment are closed up, and in the madness of credulity superficial evidence leads to decision, conquers humanity without entirely eradicating his love, and makes him sacrifice the life of her he holds most dear:

————— One more,—one more,—(kissing Desdemona):
Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,
And love thee after;—one more, and this the last:
So sweet was ne'er so fatal.—

Iago's character is likewise an inimitable portraiture. The utter extinction of every principle of virtue exhibited in his deep laid bloody scheme of rising by the downfall of all who stand in the way of his views, is artfully marked in every word he utters, whilst his purpose, is concealed under the mask of friendship from those whom he pretends to serve. Iago is a part that requires much versatility of powers in the actor, in order to maintain the varying expressions that are called forth; and although, as a person of the drama he is detestable to the last degree, yet an able performer of the character, finds it does not lessen, but rather adds to the amount of applause he derives from the representation.

COVENT GARDEN.

ANOTHER numerous Audience attended this House, last Night, to see The Two Gentlemen of Verona; but one of its charms was lost in the person of Miss M. TREE, whose interesting acting, and delightful singing, in the part of Julia, formed to most of the frequenters of this Theatre, a chief delight in witnessing its performance. This amiable and pleasing young lady will, we trust, be able to re-assume the character on its next representation, for whilst indisposition restrains her from appearing before the public, to remember her is to regret her absence. We, by no means, by a merited compliment paid to Miss TREE, would wish, unduly, to hurt the feelings of Mrs. BOYLE, who was her substitute last night. Yet the duty we owe to ourselves and our readers, compels us to state our opinion to be adverse to the latter lady's personation of Julia; and we were extremely sorry to see her put forward in a part for which we were previously convinced she was unfitted. That our sentiments were not singular, was clearly shewn by the coldness of her reception. Whatever Mrs. BOYLE can hereafter effect by study and practice, it is not a question that at present she is not calculated to make any impression on a London Audience. Miss HALLANDE seemed a little affected with a cold, as there was an unusual thickness in her voice. We have to mention a change of a Performer, which the play-bill very improperly neglected to announce. For our part we do not like partiality, and think it most unfair towards a new Performer suddenly thrust into a character for the first time, not to have a little of the Bill-Writer's aid, and if not mentioned in large letters, at least to have an introductory word or two about a first appearance in small letters. That sensible Actor from Newfoundland, who has hitherto played Crab, it grieves us to say from some cause to us unknown (perhaps from indisposition) did not perform, but his place was filled by a Mongrel, whose person, gait, and action, were by no means equal to the proper representation of a quiet, tractable, good-natured, and graceful dog. He made a perfectly up-hill, and silly part of Crab, as he was obliged to be dragged through every scene, and shewed as much alarm at the sword of the robber as if he expected to have a cut on the face.

DRURY LANE,

WE are happy to state that this House had last Night, the benefit of a numerous and genteel Audience to see Othello,—the Galleries certainly were not full, but the Pit, Dress-Boxes, and First-Circle, were so. If success through the means of the legitimate drama secured us here from the invasion of Spectacle-pieces, and other Minor Theatre trash, we should give greater vent to our congratulations at the Manager's recent endeavour to make Comedy and Tragedy sufficiently attractive to answer the demands of his treasury. If Mr. ELLISTON were to increase the strength of his tragic company by two or three superior Performers to lighten the burthen that Mr. KEAN labours under in supporting single-handed the interest of plays that require much talent in the secondary characters, he would, we think, soon find his advantage in thus adequately conveying the whole force and beauty of the Author.

In the Tragedy of last night, the indifferent sketch of Iago that Mr. COOPER gives, proves highly injurious to the general effect, and in some degree destroys the interest that should attach to the conduct of Othello; for if the art of the former is not displayed in a way to apparently justify the reliance of the latter, the Moor's frenzied jealousy is rendered apparently more the work of his own imagination, than of the designing villain. Mr. COOPER's expression, falls short of what his judgment directs. He is always respectable but seldom great,—and Iago is a character that requires wonderful power over features and voice, which Mr. COOPER does not possess. Mr. RUSSELL should not attempt Roderigo,—and Cassio in Mr. PENLEY's hands is far from the man we took him for,—Mrs. WEST as the gentle Desdemona, looked and acted the part extremely well,—and Mrs. EGERTON represented Emelia in a very forcible manner.

Of Mr. KEAN's Othello, we have already spoken,—it is an admirable piece of acting. Much applause was bestowed on him, and the curtain fell amidst loud approbation.

DRURY LANE,

SECRETS WORTH KNOWING, and THE REVIEW, were performed on Saturday Evening to a good House: both pieces were excellently represented in their principal parts; but Mr. THOMPSON has found his way into each of them and our ears really revolt at the sounds he emits: of the usefulness of this gentleman to a low-salary-loving Manager, we may have our general ideas; but, in the name of that part of the public, who understand the difference between a field-preacher's tones and those of an educated Orator, and who prefer the latter, we protest against Mr. THOMPSON's introduction into parts for which he is disqualified by his most peculiar voice. We conceive him to be naturally fitted for a certain species of low Irish characters, in which the uncouth finishing of his periods would somewhat harmonize with the brogue. Indeed, the only character we ever saw him in with any thing like satisfaction, was that of King Corney, in the defunct piece Giovanni in Ireland—we espied something like native humor in his personation of his most vulgar Majesty. There is another gentleman at this Theatre whose delivery is of a most unhappy nature,—we mean Mr. VINING. He often puts us in pain least there should be an abortion under the very nose of Glo'ster, or Macbeth. Our object in making these remarks is not wantonly to hurt the feelings of either of these gentlemen, whom we personally respect, but to let them know wherein they fail to satisfy the Audience and bring disrepute on the Company to which they are attached. Our hope is, that they have the power, by study, to get rid of their highly defective elocution,—if they have not this ability, the frequenters of a Metropolitan Theatre are very unlikely to be satisfied.

---

COVENT GARDEN.

THE entertainments at this House on Saturday Evening, drew a very numerous and fashionable Audience. The Pit and Galleries were crowded, and the Dress and Upper-Circles of Boxes were well filled. The Beggars' Opera was the chief performance of the evening.

It is not an agreeable task to criticize a female's performance of the character of Macheath, in-as-much as we have a consideration for the lady, whose delicacy has been wounded by the gross conduct of avaricious and unfeeling Managers. The remarks which we consider it as incumbent upon us to make on this performance, we would willingly offer with the nicest regard to the sentiments of the individual who is selected for their subject, but towards her we direct not our censure but to the Managers, through whose means the Drama might assume its proper level; and who we regret to say, possess the power of influencing the public taste, and of degrading or directing it to dignified and manly objects—on them should censure fall. It is most cruel to expose a young actress in a character like Macheath; and, is only surpassed by the ridiculous inconsistency with which the Opera itself is deprived of some of its best scenes, lest delicacy should be wounded by the introduction of immodest women on the stage. The Beggars' Opera is not without its moral: by the incidents in the THREE acts the story of the piece is related and the moral conveyed; yet, by the foolish curtailment both story and moral are lost, and no more of the original preserved than affords an opportunity for a display of Macheath's character as ineffectual as it is indelicate. It may be thought fastidious were we to object to a female assuming the male attire in the course of the plot, but it is a different thing for her to personate a male character, and that a dissolute highwayman, demanding a profligate portraiture quite at variance with that sense of delicacy which forms the chief charm of the softer sex. Every effort of the Managers thus to sacrifice the private feelings and best interests of the profession for their particular advantage, should be resisted by the Performers, and by the Public, as an insult to both.

ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.

On Saturday Night this Theatre was opened for the season with the Opera of "NOZZE DI FIGARO," and a New Ballet, entitled "PANDORE," produced by MONSIEUR ANATOLE, whose arrangement and execution were very creditable to his talents in this line. In the Opera, a SIGNORA CARADORI represented the Page, "being her first appearance on any stage." She is above the middle size, and possesses pleasing features, with a sweet voice of considerable power. Several encores testified the approbation of a brilliant Audience. The House has not been altered materially since last season.

The talents of the Company selected by Mr. EBERS, for the present campaign, are said to be of a description meriting success.

DRURY LANE,

It is with sincere satisfaction we mention that this Theatre, last night, overflowed in the Pit and Galleries, whilst the Dress Boxes and First-Circle were quite full, and the Upper-Circle about half so. We should not testify the slightest pleasure on the occasion had we nothing to state as the cause of this excellent attendance save Melo-Drame and Processions; but when MACBETH, one of Shakspeare's best plays, and The REVIEW, one of our most agreeable old Farces, were the sources of attraction, it becomes us as lovers of rational entertainment to testify our gratified feelings at success produced by such means.

Mr. KEAN's personation of Macbeth is certainly on the whole a masterly effort—he brings so much of mind into play, that an English Audience, who are generally gifted with a considerable portion of sound sense, are almost continually under the influence of his intellect, and are ready to acknowledge every forcible impression with something like enthusiasm. Yet we perceive great defects in his style. There are at times modulations of his voice by no means in unison with the sentiments he is delivering; and often he has a redundancy of action,—but where shall we find perfection in any representation of the variegated impulses of some beings, whose weaknesses and vigour combined, cast so many lights and shades of character around, that to pourtray them all with absolute truth, is almost beyond the ability of any histrionic artist: GARRICK had defects,—but shall we on that account deny him the distinction universally bestowed on him, of being the greatest actor the British stage ever beheld?

Miss EDMISON, who performed Lady Macbeth, is in our opinion fully established as the ablest tragic actress we now possess. We assert that had she the figure of Mrs. SIMMONS, and a little more strength of voice, the powerful personifier of the stern passions of her sex, might, in her retirement, tremble for the memory of her fame. But as it is, Miss EDMISTON is on her way to partake with the celebrated recluse, in the highest honors of her profession, when time or circumstances shall at some, we trust, distant period, induce her to quit the stage. She met with the warmest applause for her excellent representation last night, which, with the general effect of the tragedy, may suggest to the Manager the propriety of affording further opportunities for those to witness it who have not yet had that pleasure.

Mr. COOPER, although rather sonorous in some parts of his delivery as Macduff, acted well, and received just applause.

The PIRATE, a New Piece (with music) founded on the Northern Novellist's piece of that name, is to be acted to-night. We should conceive from the Dramatis Personæ, that the lighter parts of the story are to be considerably curtailed to preserve the seriousness of the main plot.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS House was last night, (as it has usually been for the last three weeks) extremely full. Mr. YOUNG acted in The EXILE with more than his usual energy, and in many parts the beautiful intonations of his voice, occasioned the delivery of some passages to strike their mark—the heart, with truest aim. Mr. FAWCETT sang his disgusting song of Young Lobski with some humor, and was most vehemently encored in it,—so much for the delicacy of the times, when such ribaldry creates attention and delight. What a pity it is that Mr. HUNT cannot divest his delivery of speech of the barking, and sing-song monotony which are peculiar to it: this gentleman has a good figure and face,—the tones of his voice are not bad, but are such as might be much improved were he to devote a little attention to the cultivation of flexibility, and the correction of the peculiarities which now mark them.

DRURY LANE,

THE New serious Drama entitled The PIRATE, which was produced, last night for the first time, is, as we have before mentioned, taken from the Novel of that name. The Author of the latter has produced in this instance a work somewhat similar in its leading features to several of his other Novels. He takes the history and topography of a country, and intent on drawing a picture of its public events, or manners and customs of a particular period, combined with a description of its scenery, he contrives a story that shall exhibit and illustrate each. It has happened that in some of his attempts of this kind, he has raised a considerable interest in the characters and events he has developed, and in these have been excellent materials for a dramatic structure on the same bases. We cannot, however, admit the Pirate to be of this description. Its principal charm lies in the delineation of character by artful, and sometimes delicate touches, whilst the incidents have little that is bold or new. The story is not of a nature that can be made prominent and effective without much detail; which always proves a clog on the moving business of the stage.

Thus The Pirate, dramatised as it has been with considerable fidelity and scenic talent, and aided by the charms of sweet music, and beautiful and appropriate scenery, and represented on the whole in an admirable manner, yet does it not stand clear and correct before our imagination, nor yield us any thing approaching that satisfaction and delight which the minute descriptions in the original afford. Those who have read the Novel will hardly be pleased at the parts that are omitted; and those who have not, will find some difficulty in comprehending the plot. We shall not attempt to give a lengthened statement of it. The drama commences with the saving of Cleveland (the Pirate) by Mordaunt Merton,—the former then visits The Udaller to obtain restitution of his plundered property,—the loves of Minna and Brenda the Udaller's daughters, are then made apparent,—the former for Cleveland,—the latter for Mordaunt, who severally return their affection. Norna, a mystic being, who hovers around the lovers, instigates Mordaunt to suspect the motives of Cleveland—a coldness between the youths ensues, and at length reaches to mutual defiance,—they fight, Mordaunt is wounded, cured by Norna, and finally follows with her to Kirkwall, whither Cleveland has gone to meet a vessel he has discovered to be his consort, and whither also The Udaller and his daughters, and Mordaunt's Father the recluse of Sumburgh have also proceeded to. Here after contending schemes amongst the pirates interviews between the lovers and Norna, Cleveland, and the father of Mordaunt,—then the capture of the Rovers,—the destruction of their vessel,—the discovery of Cleveland being the son of Norna,—and now a pardoned Rover, and next a forgiven suitor of the fair Minna,—here after these events the curtain drops over the prospect of happiness thus shed around. The Piece was much applauded throughout, but towards the conclusion some opposition shewed itself, but we think the great majority was in favor of its repetition, which was accordingly announced.

We regretted that it had not been possible to have included the Agriculturist, Mr. Yellowley, and his economical sister Miss Baby. Considerable humor might have been thrown into their parts which would have materially relieved the sombre cast of the Piece.

The House was crowded in every part except the Second-Circle of Boxes, and the Galleries.

We shall speak of the Performers, &c. in our next Number.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Opera of Rob Roy Macgregor, was performed, last night, to a numerous audience. Miss STEPHENS as Diana Vernon, and Mr. MACREADY as Rob, met with great applause.

DRURY LANE,

The PIRATE, was represented last night to a by no means full House. It went off somewhat better than on the first evening, and received considerable applause, but not unmixed with slight opposition. We are sorry that it has been dramatised in so serious a manner; for the Poet Halero, with all his admiration of "the glorious John," and the Thespian Lieutenant Bunce, with all his stage-struck-seaman-like bustle, could not elevate us for an instant from the dismal depths we were plunged into by the melancholy Norna, the gloomy-faced Mertoun, and the contentions, perplexities and sorrows of the lovers. Had Mr. Triptolemus Yellowley, and his sister been humorously introduced, and personated ably, a certain vivacity would have been created highly in favor of the piece,—but we must now take it as it is. Mr. LOVEDAY had but little to do as the hearty blunt old Magnus. Mr. POPE was the elder Mertoun; it is never without a smile that we behold his expression of extreme grief; it looks so like that of a well whipped school-boy. Mr. COOPER acted the Pirate with good effect. Mr. PENLEY also, did ample justice to his part; and looked young Mordant admirably. But, Mr. MUNDAS; why did we find you representing the Pedlar Snaelesfoot? was it to be expected that out of your private stock of humor you could afford to lend a trifle to the troaking body, as he had so little of that commodity about him? well—you were generous enough to afford him more than he deserved, and we, on whose account you chiefly opened your laugh-creating resources, are your debtors. Yet, we cannot but think you might have distributed your treasures to better purpose than in endeavouring to produce a grin at your indifferent-good Scotch which very few of your friends comprehended. Mr. HARLEY as Jack Bunce, was almost launched on his proper element—bustle; but the tide of the piece would not float him long enough to attempt a jolly cruise of fun. Halero, by Mr. GATTIE, so completely brought Cheapside to our imagination, that we could never suppose him connected with the wild rocks of Zetland, and the Muses. Mrs. W. WEST gave to the dramatic Norna the gentle attributes denied her in the Novel: but when she had to express violent feelings, her voice failed to give the powerful impression demanded by the words. Minna by MADAME VESTRIS, and Brenda by Miss CUBITT, sang their songs with much taste and skill

COVENT GARDEN.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA, and the PANTOMIME drew a very numerous Audience to this Theatre last Night. The Pit was full,—the Galleries nearly so,—the Dress Boxes respectably attended,—and the other Circles rather indifferently so,

Mr. JONES was very deficient in the words of his character. Mr. BLANCHARD performed the part of Speed with his usual success: and we noticed with much pleasure in the last scene but one of the fourth act, an attention to the lighter shades, which denoted the Master—On being surrounded by the Robbers, Speed labours under the greatest fear, and, with much vehemency entreats Sir Valentine to accept their offer of electing him as their Captain; on his doing which, the timid servant instantly became the courageous comrade, and Mr. B. giving the full effect to this, after a few minutes of examination, changed the cock of his hat to that assumed by the Banditti, and in other respects evinced a desire to imitate their manners and habits. These are but trifles, yet these trifles pourtray the mind of the Actor; and as we are often severe when we perceive "trifling" encroachments upon the propriety of the stage, we are alike ready to notice every treat of talent and study. We must congratulate Mr. Mongrel on his improvement in the character of Crab; his knowledge of the stage, and confidence, during his performance, have very much increased since his debut, and he seemed to have imbibed a very favorable idea of the passing events, as on the wag of his tail being referred to for an answer to a question, with much precosity of talent, he gave the unexpected reply to the great amusement of Messrs. Liston and Blanchard.

A Man in the Basket (as it is termed) by conversing loudly, disturbed those about him, and was mildly requested by a Gentleman to lower his tone; but he replied, by observing, that he supposed the person who addressed him was some Shop Boy or other: on the question being put to him if—who he was,—he answered, a Gentleman,—but this statement not perfectly agreeing with his conduct in the estimation of his opponent, the latter told him so: a few words now passed—cards were exchanged, and the bully with a great deal of sang froid concluded the altercation by stating—that he would shoot him to-morrow; this created a hearty laugh from all around.

DRURY LANE,

The Pirate, was again acted, last night, under pretty nearly the same circumstances as on the previous evening, except that Mr. FRIZWILLIAM took the burthensome pack off Mr. MUNDEN's shoulders, and appeared as the Pecklar, which he represented tolerably well; only that as his Irish tongue is a good deal mixed with an English smack, so is his Scotch with both. This change was no more than we expected. The fact is, we believe, that the part of Snafflesfoot was forced on Mr. MUNDEN: by forced we mean, that his good nature induced him to yield to the solicitations that he would accept the character, it being urged that the potency of his name for a night or two, would tend much towards establishing the piece in the public favor. Accordingly Mr. MUNDEN has played Bait, and shoals have been caught. He now thinks he has done his duty, and leaves The Pirate to the favoring gale.

We take this opportunity of making known to the Manager that his Theatre is attended with some serious inconveniences to the Audience. Every one whose olfactory nerves are not destroyed, must be conscious of the unpleasant smell in the upper part of the House arising from the Gas. But the evil is not confined to the smell,—the colour of the light emitted casts a ghost-like tinge over the human countenance divine, and many a fair lady is deprived of the due influence of her charms. A different cause of complaint exists in the state of the backs of some of the Boxes; the paint or green wash comes off, and leaves on the coats of those who recline there a palpable mark. We have had sundry garments thus sent to Monmouth-Street before their time.

COVENT GARDEN.

FOLLY still spreads her silken net o'er time-borne Taste, and smiles in wantonness at her vain struggles to regain lost liberty and rule. The EXILE, and the PANTOMIME, again drew a crowded Audience, last night, who warmly testified the gratification which the merits of the entertainments gave them. The Performers made their usual exertions, and received their proportionate rewards. A qualification of our first observation, we must make in reference to Miss FOOTE, and Mrs. FAWCIT. The former lady elicited by her acting of the part of Elizabeth, a higher sentiment of delight than we had on previous occasions experienced,—'twas one, which flew from the sensation of interest, and lit up that of deeper feeling,—her countenance and expressions on hearing her Fathers' pardon, produced a considerable and just effect. Mrs. FAWCIT has many requisites for a respectable actress, but often endeavours to exceed those acquirements, and soar into a sphere above her powers to support: without particularly applying this general observation to so inferior a character as the Empress Elizabeth, the defects we point out are, even in it, sufficiently portrayed to render them conspicuous. We beg to remind this lady that it is not requisite for a Tyrrell to be inspired with—or to display, the sentiments and powers of a Richard, and “that any thing so overdone or come tardy off,” is from the purpose of acting.—To make a character as prominent as is consistent with itself, its situation, and the circumstances of the piece, displays the true capabilities for the profession. A Gentleman between the acts amused (or rather annoyed) the Audience by an indifferent execution of a tune on the pandean pipes.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The Present offered by F. G., is indignantly refused. His “friend” we are convinced is too much a man of honor to desire to reach the temple of fame by so dirty a road.

We are not inclined to deviate, Mr. “FINGER-POST.”

T. Q.'s favor we would insert,—but our pages are almost too confined to admit epistles that are not absolutely called for by circumstances.

DRURY LANE,

THE attendance here, last night, to see MACBETH, was very respectable. The Pit and Dress Boxes were quite full,—the other parts of the House rather thin, Mr. KEAN as Macbeth, and Miss EDMISTONE as Lady Macbeth, both acted with uncommon energy and effect, and received great applause, Mr. COOPER as Macduff, delivered many of his passages with proper force and correctness; but it is unfortunate that he should so often destroy the favorable impressions he makes, by an over-exertion of his lungs. His voice and manner are almost ludicrously energetic in the exclamation,—

" He has no children ——— " which, by the bye, we think he erroneously applies to Malcolm instead of Macbeth. Mr. COOPER bellowed this out with his utmost power, at the same time pointing to Malcolm, as much as to say,—“ He cannot enter into my feelings at the murder of my little ones, for he has no children.” Surely, this is wrong,—Shakspeare could not mean it thus. Is Malcolm, who offers words of comfort to Macduff, deserving of reproof for doing so? In our opinion Macduff alludes to Macbeth. That his thoughts were turned towards the bloody tyrant, in the same speech, is evident—

“ He has no children,—All my pretty ones!
Did you say all?—Oh Hell-Kite!—All!

Macbeth is the Hell-Kite, who, Childless himself, hath no touch of sympathy for a parent's feelings.

We gave no weight to the circumstance of Macbeth having had children, as is intimated by Lady Macbeth's words “ I have given suck,”—that he had any living at the time of the story of the Play, does not appear.

---

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Performances at this Theatre still continue to attract very numerous Audiences; and that, assembled last night, might vie in numbers with those on any previous one. It were needless to offer any observation on the chief performance of the evening,—Miss STEPHENS' Polly: it is altogether as strictly within the limits of the most refined taste, as it is beyond the influence of detracting criticism. Mr. EMERY'S Lockit, is an admirable piece of acting. This gentleman with an inexhaustible fund of ripest humour, pours it in a style so purely natural, and without the apparent aids of art or trick, that it seems indigenous to the parent stock from which it springs. Peachum and Mrs. Peachum, were sustained with infinite force by Mr. BLANCHARD, and Mrs. DAVENPORT.

The TWO PAGES OF FREDERICK THE GREAT, followed the Opera and excited much attention and amusement. Mr. FAWCET as Phelps, was excessively humorous and turned the page of recollection's volume to a leaf far back. Mrs. GIBBS both in manner and appearance, was a fair object for jealousy to fix its mask upon. Mr. W. FARREN'S, Frederick is as admirable a piece of acting as we have for some time witnessed. One of the Gods (Mars we presume) amused himself between the acts, by imitating the shrill notes of a Cock.

THIS Theatre was on Saturday evening very well attended.—The galleries were less so than on the previous nights, but the other divisions of the house were moderately filled. Miss HALLANDE sang unusually well, and was with much propriety encored in her first song, to which she gave very great effect. We consider this lady as a very promising young actress; and she pays an evident attention to her characters, and evinces a desire to give to them a becoming prominence. Until recently, the sciences of music and of acting were considered as separate, or at least, their correct and equal combination in the drama was a study, (however essential in reality,) but little attended to, and consequently seldom pourtrayed. Miss TREX whose qualifications for an actress, are equal to her requisites for a singer, has justly obtained as much praise by her distinguishing talents in the former, as in the latter. This lady has materially raised an interest in the musical characters before unfelt, and which is likely to inspire other fair votaries to the same pursuit, with a proper spirit of emulation.

We before noticed Miss HALLANDE'S efforts in the part of Silvia with due praise; but this lady must be careful to observe the difference between boisterous ranting, and energetic feeling, (we allude to the last scene.) These are errors which young performers are often liable to.

Mr. TINNEY did not sustain his part in the compound music, which suffered materially by his absence. We cannot too highly praise the exquisite taste and execution displayed by a gentleman in the orchestra, who, in the wretched Overture to the Pantomime, plays on the clarionet the air of Ceuse your Funning.

DRURY LANE.

THE present endeavour of the Manager to gratify the public with entertainment congenial to good taste, is very commendable, and merits the substantial support of the public. We have seen here of late, Comedy, and, in some parts, Tragedy well performed; and although much more might be done to render the entire representations worthy of approval, yet we are ready to confess that the company is now very often called on for its best exertions. There is, certainly, great deficiencies in the second and third rate tragic performers, which occasions serious injury to the general effect of the tragedies acted here, and may account for the slight attraction their performance has been marked with. It is absurd to suppose that audiences can be drawn in crowds merely to see the efforts of one or two celebrated performers, whose appearances are no longer novelties. Most play-goers look greatly to the general filling-up of the characters, and thereby judge of the entertainments held out to them: if they conceive that the play, on the whole, will be indifferently acted, they are very unlikely to pay their money to see one part well done. It, therefore, becomes necessary for Mr. Elliston to endeavour to strengthen his tragic forces, or, he may rely on it, Mr. KEAN and Miss EDMISTON, will have to add good-fortune to their merits if they continue to attract. Better would it be for that lady and gentleman to be advertised for Readings from Shakespeare, than that scenes intermediate to their parts should be mangled and burlesqued, until the patience of an audience can hardly be acquitted for its sufferings by the excellence that follows.

Although THE PIRATE is a species of Drama that hardly comes within the scope of critical praise, yet as far as diversity is necessary to the interests of a Theatre, and the immediate appetite of a novelty-loving public, we may let it pass for its music's sake, and the exhibition of some beautiful scenery. On Saturday night, it was performed with similar effect to its former representations.

KING LEAR is to be acted to-night. Lear by Mr. KEAN, and Cordelia by Miss EDMISTON—So far well.

THE ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.

THE Opera of NOZZE DI FIGARO, was on Saturday repeated at this House to a very brilliant audience. Signora Rosalbina Coradori as Cherubino, acted and sang with considerable force and sweetness. In the song of Non so piu, she produced a great effect. Our limits will not at present permit us to enter at length upon the merits of the performers, but we shall devote a larger space to this subject in our next notice of this house.

DRURY LANE.

A "brilliant" audience were assembled last night to see Mr. KEAN as King Lear, and Miss EDMISTON as Cordelia, for their performance of these characters were novelties, the gentleman not having played the part of Lear for a long period, and the lady never having appeared before as the aged monarch's faithful daughter.

Mr. KEAN's personation of the regal sufferer fell far short of our expectation. He failed in many points on several occasions—his voice, his gait, and action, were, frequently, totally at variance with the idea of four-score. Yet at intervals he remembered the age he had to represent, and resumed the feeble porte, and trebling voice. It was when passion or feeling, strongly roused, bore him along, that he succeeded best. The curse upon Gonerill was very forcibly delivered—nothing could surpass the bitterness of expression with which he repeated—

" Turn all her mother's pains, and benefits
To laughter and contempt; that she may feel
How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is,
To have a thankless child! —————"

The mingled feelings called forth on the first discovery of his powerless condition, were exhibited with great truth and adherence to nature. His mad scenes were in general the least effective—but by far his finest effort was in the first scene of the last act, where returning reason breaks gradually forth. Much applause was here bestowed on him. Of Miss EDMISTON's Cordelia, we would say, it possessed much merit—it was tender and forcible. Yet she too frequently under-pitches her voice, and leaves to the ear nothing but indistinct murmurs, like gentle waves on a pebble-shore, that lull the senses into pleasing melancholy. She frequently received a flattering testimony of the approbation of the audience. Mr. COOPER is always respectable, and was never more so than as Edgar. But this is a character that requires to be filled by a first-rate performer; we cannot say this gentleman answers this description, and, therefore, Edgar was but indifferently acted. He, however, received occasional applause, although it was not always called for; in particular, we conceive the vehement approbation bestowed on his appearance in a coat of mail, was a little derogatory to the good sense of the audience. Mr. BARNARD was a miserable Edmund. Mr. BROMLEY and Mr. POPE were not contemptible as Glo'ster and Kent. On the whole, this Tragedy will bear repetition here.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS Theatre was extremely full last night, and the entertainments went off with their usual eclat. The Procession of the Empress Elizabeth's Entry into Moscow, though we dare say for the 30th time last night represented, produced as much delight as was created by its first exhibition. Either the play-goers in this metropolis are inexhaustible, or their taste for this style of amusement is more deeply rooted than we could have hoped, or even supposed it to have been. Nothing remarkable occurred during the performances. We do not consider as singularly worthy of notice the noise in the Galleries occasioned by the half-price gentry. Our ears have been well tutored to the music of their lungs. We hear it rumoured, that a disturbance of rather a violent description took place in the Olympic some few evenings ago. The circumstances of it (as we have been informed) were, that some of the performers having been enjoying themselves rather too freely at a theatrical dinner, were not prepared to sustain their characters in the pieces announced, and that through some dispute with the managers, Miss Norton refused doing so: the consequence was, that Mr. Oxberry, the Stage Manager, informed the assembled, and after disappointed few who composed the audience, that their money should be returned to them; but unfortunately for the realization of this liberal proposition, it had vanished in the custody of the door-keepers, who became therefrom their own treasurers and paymasters. This is the account which we have heard—for its accuracy we do not pledge ourselves.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Opera of Rob Roy, and the Pantomime of Mother Bunch were the entertainments, last night, at this Theatre, and drew to it rather a numerous audience. The dress boxes, though well, were not very fashionably attended: the pit was full, and the galleries were sufficiently so, to answer the ease and objects of these frequenters. We have in our former papers noticed at some length, the dramatic hash, which to gratify popular clamour and treasury interests, has now become a favorite head-dish at Theatrical entertainments, and was, with others of its style, as fast as their designer could invent them, carved, laid out, and like a new imported turtle at some Eastern hotels duly advertised in rhyme most tempting to the epicurean taste of city-feeders. To those who have trespassed in imagination's dream upon the days of yore, and with the blood of Fergus strode the field of Preston—doffed the plumed bonnet to the Chevalier's knee—from Merrilies prophetic warnings felt, fate's barb—with Fitzjames turned the Trossachs glen, or with the high soul'd Minna responsive answered to the murmuring waves upon the pebbled shore, when elfs and witches in moonlight danced. Can any one who has imbibed the sentiments those characters pourtray, derive from these "musical," "melo-dramatical," "farcical," "tragic," yet dramatical representations upon the Stage; one feeling, save that which may be excited, by an unskilful artist's portrait of the friend we held most dear. Mr. Macready's performance of Rob Roy, we do not admire: in his reception of the character he errs, his delineation of it must consequently be incorrect. Macgregor is not a cold sententious TRAGEDIAN, but a bold, feeling independent MAN. Miss Stephens sang with her usual powers, and in the song of "A Highland Lad" produced great applause: Mr. Liston played the Baillie, truer to himself, than he did on previous occasions. The tramp chorus was sung with good effect.

• Miss WILSON, late of Drury Lane, is performing in Dublin with some success.

We propose to render our work more unique, by giving in it, Biographical Sketches of all the principal performers.

DRURY LANE.

Last night The Pirate, Three Weeks after Marriage, and The Children in the Wood, were the entertainments—they appeared to give considerable satisfaction to a respectable audience. Mr. ELLISTON as Sir Charles Racket, and Mrs. EDWIN as Lady Racket, in the second piece, are established favourites; and Mr. ELLISTON'S Walter in the last piece is full of energy and feeling—but we remember Jack Bannister, as he was familiarly called, and his Walter still reigns superior in our memory.

THE ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.

At this Theatre was produced, last night, a new Opera, entitled, Il Barone Di Dolsheim. It much resembles in its construction a melo-drama acted at Covent Garden some time back, founded on an anecdote of Frederick the Great. The Opera, likewise, borrows its story from an incident in the life of that rigid disciplinarian. Carlo, Baron of Dolsheim, an officer of Frederick's army then on the banks of the Oder, who has been guilty of a slight violation of military rules, is imprisoned by the King for it, in a Castle commanded by Blumenthal, who has also in charge, Theodore, a Captain of Hussars. The Governor has two daughters, Amalia and Batilde, the former a serious romantic girl, the latter full of animation—however, they correspond in feeling for the fate of the two youths—they unite in petitioning Frederick to pardon them, aided by Brandt, an old Corporal—the pardon is about to be granted, when it is discovered that Carlo has escaped, and he is accordingly proclaimed a deserter. However, he has the good fortune in his flight to rally a dispersed corps of Frederick's, who consequently pardons and rewards him.

Our limits prevent our saying more than that the Opera was deservedly successful, although the music wants originality. Signor Cartoni, who made his debut as Frederick, is from figure, voice, and talent, a great acquisition. His voice is between a tenor and bass, of soft modulation, but deep volume.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE audience at this House last night was not so numerous, as had been assembled on many previous ones: yet if either the Exile, or the Carnival, in the Two Gentlemen of Verona, had been the announced first piece, instead of the Beggar's Opera, we doubt not but the Theatre would have been crowded—such are the prevailing objects of the general taste. Though the correction (or at least the exposure) of the foibles of mankind, is the first duty incurred by the situation of the ages' censors, 'tis one, we fear, more appreciated by the mass for the visionary principles it would inculcate, and which divert their imaginations, than for the reference to its real objects—the advancement of mental and social dignity. A Theatre is, perhaps, the best school in which Philosophy can substantiate its theories upon the evidences of observation and experience. It is a great national assembly of all classes, met but for one pursuit. There the proud streams of rank, of wealth, of power, quit their exalted birth-places, and mingling with the lowly brooks, in equal currents glide into the sea of pleasure—there, sorrow's holds are loosened from the heart;—the mind distracting turmoil of the world—the proud pursuits of fiery ambition—the gnawing cravings of black avarice, are there all sunk, and with a narrow circled ripple in their fall, coerce in harmony with those they join. An observer there beholds one sentiment pervade thousands, and sees the "grievous ills" of life—its passions sportively played with at the puppet's skill. "Why, what is Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba."

Miss STEPHENS performed the character of Polly last night with her usual excellence and effect. The song of "But he so teased me" she sang with peculiar taste and sweetness. Miss HALLANDE's Macbeth we spoke of on a previous occasion; and in doing so, exposed the pitiful and low-minded policy, which sacrificed delicacy, propriety, and a lady's feelings, to the petty considerations of sordid interest. Mr. EMERY's Lockit was admirable. We always repine when our duty compels us harshly to bestow censure when a lady is the object of it; but we regret to see Mrs. LISTON in a character like Lucy. Mr. C. KEMBLE has been playing for some time at Bath; and is, we are informed, engaged for the Haymarket Theatre, which opens in April.

ROMEO AND JULIET, is to be performed here to-night, and the chief attraction of the evening is the first appearance of Miss FANNY BRUNTON on this Stage, in the character of Juliet. This young lady is a niece of Lady Craven, and is said to have many pleasing requisites for the part she is to represent.

This Play, as acted, is altered by Garrick, who certainly has deprived it of many poetical beauties, not from any wantonness of taste, but from the necessity of shortening it. Enough remains to inspire the sweetest, most melancholy feelings of the breast.

With the young, its charm lies in the heart; with the old it exists in the memory. One glows at the congenial tenderness of the scene—the other recalls the images of past life, and regrets the misfortunes of the lovers, without participating in the warmth of affection they exhibit.

DRURY LANE.

WE had nothing represented here, last night, that could elevate the character of the British Drama. The Pirate, a piece detailing an uninteresting story, contrived without ingenuity, and conveying no moral, has but the negative quality of being an inoffensive medium for introducing some pleasing music and beautiful scenery. The very novellist, whose fame was the stimulus for the dramatist's exertions, has in this last effort of his genius, failed in producing an equally powerful effect, with that of most of his former works in this line. We fear he has exhausted his stores for some time, and, therefore, we would recommend him to refresh his mind by turning his thoughts into a new channel. The poor patch-work dramatic authors who exist on putting together whatever materials they can lay their hands on, must in this case put aside the scissors, or be content with cutting out Shakespeare to suit the musicians, or posting to Paris to pick up interesting dramas, full of poisons, poignards, and perturbations. But stop—we forget ourselves—a new Tragedy is announced for Monday next, and who knows but it may prove a sublime effort from the garret of some of our old manufacturers, if not from that of a new aspirant, or the closet of my lord—or the honorable Mr. —, or even Sir Lumley—, whose long dormant Muse may be at length awoke by the noise of Coronation drums and trumpets. Whoever it comes from, we shall not fail to pay it due attention.

VENICE PRESERVED, is to be acted this evening, and the appearance of Miss EDMISTON as Belvidera, for the first time, is the source of curiosity.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Tragedy of Romeo and Juliet was last night performed to a very numerous audience, and introduced a fair débütante to the London boards for scenic honours and applause. Since Miss O'NEILL quitted the stage, a vacuum has existed in the most important line of female characters; and those pieces, which from the beautiful delineations of that Lady, wedded the softer feelings to the more rugged ones of nature, have been either laid aside, or occasionally revived as the aspiring hopes of candidates drew them, like the memory-reviving portrait of some dear remembered friend, from the ease to which affection had confided it. Many attempts have been made to supply the deficiency of which we now complain; and each, though with comparative success—like twinkling meteors which appear and vanish, to the fixed planet, whose clear and sparkling light sheds brilliancy around. Miss F. BRUNTON, the daughter of Mr. BRUNTON, the Manager of the Brighton Theatre, sister to a lady of conspicuous talents, recently of Covent Garden, and now upon the Dublin stage—and niece to the Countess of Craven, is the Lady who last night made her first appearance in the character of Juliet. Her figure is graceful, her deportment good, her action, though rather stiff, not inelegant; her countenance is pleasing, yet not strikingly expressive. This lady's voice is her chief natural defect: in the declamatory parts we thought its modulation strong, harmonious, and powerful; but in those of level speaking, or that required no peculiar emphasis and sentiment, it became rather mincing, with a monotony of tone which did not gratify the ear. Without possessing very striking claims to the rank of a distinguished actress, this lady possesses many requisites for a useful and pleasing one. In the energetic parts of the character she mostly excelled: the speech alluding to Tybalt's death, and commencing with—"Shall I speak ill of him that is my husband?"—her taking the phial with "tell me not of fear," and the scene in which she takes the draught, were very happily performed, being perfectly unstrained—natural, yet effective. But the performance of the part needed the lighter touches which denote the genius of the actress to render it within some degrees of being perfect. Mr. MACREARY was the lover: his last scene was particularly fine; but in the earlier ones he wanted the ardent buoyancy of youth, the natural softness of the imagination and the passions, and the effervescence of the heart, to give to Romeo its reclaiming qualities. Mr. ABBOTT sustained the character of Mercutio for JONES. The play was well received, and announced for repetition on Monday amidst considerable applause.

DRURY LANE.

VENICE PRESERVED, with Jaffier by Mr. KEAN, and Belvidera by Miss EDMISTON, could not fail to draw a numerous audience to this House, last night. Mr. KEAN is seldom seen in parts of a subdued tone—for the representation of the violent passions, is generally considered his forte. But his performance of Jaffier proves how ably he can personify a repressed and tender spirit. In every scene he gave great satisfaction, but particularly in that of his reproof by Pierre, where he finely exhibited the humbled, weak, affectionate friend, mingled with the traits of vigour, and a high feeling of honor.

Mr. COOPER as Pierre, (for the first time) on the whole, merited and received loud expressions of approbation. In the senate-scene he acted with more than his usual point, and his powerful voice here availed him to give full effect to the defiance of the lofty soldier.

Miss EDMISTON played Belvidera, (also for the first time) in a manner that has considerably raised her in public opinion. She is no copious—her style is her own, guided by her author, and by nature. In some parts we think we saw marks of hasty study, but these were amply recompensed by her powerful delineation on other occasions, and chiefly in the scenes where strong expressions are required. Her Belvidera differs from that of Miss O'Neil and Miss Fawcett, in having a higher intellectual character—it, perhaps, loses something of its tenderness from this, which is a chief feature of the hapless and affectionate wife. The two former ladies, in the parting scene with Jaffier, recognised his unlooked for return with an exclamation of surprise and pleasure—not so, Miss Edmiston,—she, on Jaffier's first exit in that scene, appeared already touched with that disarrangement which afterwards breaks out in violence:—accordingly on Jaffier's sudden return, she faintly shews a glimmer of remembrance—and echoes his parting “for ever!” with the wild lost look of one, who, horror-struck, knows not what she says or what is happening around her. Her acting in the mad scene was admirable, and drew down three rounds of applause.

COVENT GARDEN.

This House was last night extremely well attended, being infinitely more so than on the previous evening, when Romeo and Juliet was the first piece represented. All the divisions of the Theatre were almost correspondingly full. On our entrance to the Boxes, an announcement of some change in the performances struck us, which, on perusal, was an intimation, that in consequence of Mr. Jones being still very lame, Mr. Connor had at a short notice, accepted the character of Valentine, and relied on the usual indulgence. The "short notice" was very evident, though Mr. Connor performed the part with much credit and respectability. Mr. Abbott's memory resembles the wind chased clouds, ever-varying and inconstant. When this gentleman finds it necessary to substitute his own ideas for those of his author, it is a pity he does not contrive to bring them within the level of common sense. Miss Tree sang the very sweet song of "Should he up-braid," with an unusual degree of spirit, and received from the audience loud testimonies of the gratification she afforded them. Miss Hallande in the finale to the play was most woefully out of time and tune. This piece of music, has been curtailed of a duet part, which after a variety of efforts it was found impracticable to produce the least harmony from, and a further abridgement we think would not be amiss.

We much wish that the doorkeepers would consider, that to hear the performances with distinctness, while the Gods are at war in one part of the House, and their doors banging too in another, is not a very easy matter.

DRURY LANE.

The second performance of King Lear, this season, drew last night a respectable audience, the Pit, Dress-Boxes, and Galleries, being nearly full. Mr. KEAN more equally supported the remembrance of Lear's age, than on the last occasion, and gave added effect to several scenes—particularly in that where Hegan, the last stay of the old monarch's heart, proves equally unfeeling with her sister Goneril. Here he expressed with unrivalled truth the infirmities of age—the doating, then disappointed, insulted, and enraged father and king. Altogether he made a deep impression, which was evinced by the applauses bestowed on him throughout. Mr. COOPER, who again played Edgar, a part which obtained him considerable fame in the country, does not, in our opinion, confirm the judgment there passed on his representation of this character. He has caught the general features of the part, but gives not the full expression—there are too many rough touches, that make the picture a coarse likeness, and unfit it for close inspection. Some of his thundering appeals to the “Gods” were not unmarked by their approval; a Vulcan-visaged immortal took advantage of poor Tom's taking breath, to hawl out “Bravo Cooper!”

Kent was tolerably well swaggered by Mr. POPE, who having no occasion to whine, is respectable. Mr. BROMLEY delivered Glo'ster's speeches correctly. But Mr. BARNARD really must pardon us, when we declare that as Edmund, he neither looks nor acts like a man capable of winning women's hearts, nor does his villainy sit gracefully on him.

Miss EDMISTON gave great satisfaction as Cordelia; but her chief talent evidently lies in the expression of the stern virtues, or the deep and daring vices—tenderness is not perfectly congenial, we think, with her style. We entreat of her to throw out her voice a little more—as indistinctness is utter failure. Goneril and Regan were appropriately represented by Mrs. KNIGHT and Mrs. EGERTON.

COVENT GARDEN.

We think that we may venture to assert, that this Theatre has not been better attended on any night since the commencement of the present season, than it was on Saturday evening. The Boxes were full; the Pit, previous to the hour of half-price, was likewise filled; and the Galleries, if not crowded, were extremely well attended. The play of the Tempest, as altered by Dryden, was the chief performance of the evening. The principal female characters, Dorinda and Miranda, are as delicate and natural pictures of the infancy of social prejudice, and the first dawning blushes of nature's "heart of hearts," as ever were pourtrayed; nor did they lose the least portion of their charms by the more active delineations of Miss Stephens and Miss Hallande. By a policy rather inconsistent as regards the music allotted to those individuals, the part in which vocal talent was most prominent and requisite, was assigned to Miss Hallande, and in the course of the play; Miss Stephens sang (if we rightly recollect) but one air. With regard to the acting of the characters, it was equally and admirably sustained by both; but, though Miss Hallande sang with much power and effect, and was most deserving of the tumultuous encore which attended the song of "The youth that I loved so dearly," we believe we are not singular in our opinion that Miss Stephens was more adequate to create a higher sentiment of delight. The echo duet was sweetly sung and repeated. We do not think Mr. Young's Prospero by any means a happy performance. This gentleman looked well, and with much emphasis and beauty delivered some of the passages; but in the energetic parts, it was declamation without feeling. We missed Mr. Emery.

---

DRURY LANE.

On Saturday evening a numerous and genteel audience were attracted by the Tragedy of OTHELLO, and the revived musical entertainment of PAUL and VIRGINIA. In the tragedy, Mr. COOPER played the Moor, and Mr. KEAN, Iago for "the last time." Of

Mr. Cooper's performance we have to say that it was far more successful than we could have expected—he in general shewed that he thoroughly understood the part, and he often gave proofs of considerable skill and correctness in its delineation; yet it was seldom more than a bold outline. He did not, as Mr. Kean does, lead us on by a consistency of powerful genius that keeps the attention fixed and admiring. He was greatly applauded. Mr. KEAN's Iago, is not a representation that we can much repine at not seeing again—although excellent, it gave him not full opportunity of displaying his peculiar talents.

Mrs. WEST's Dysdemonia, was all that could be wished; and Mrs. EGERTON's Emilia, possessed its usual force.

Paul and Virginia has been got up in a highly pleasing manner; the sweet music delightfully sung, and the appropriate scenery finely executed, gave great satisfaction. The opening duet between Madame Vestris as Paul, and Miss Povey as Virginia, was encored—as was the moeking bird song by Miss Cubitt as Jacintha. Mrs. Bland as Mary, and Mr. Knight as her husband Dominique, were an amusing little couple.

THE ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.

The Opera entitled Il Barone di Dolsheim, was repeated on Saturday to a very brilliant House. The plot of this piece we gave in our last remarks on this Theatre. Signor Cartoni as Frederick, supported the celebrity he acquired in that part on his debut, and performs the character with much truth and spirit, pourtraying the peculiarities of the old disciplinarian with the happiest effect. Signor Cartoni's voice of the baritono style, is possessed of fluency and depth, marked by much cultivation. Ambrogetti as Brandt the corporal, was admirable: and though sometimes expressing an exuberance of vivacity beyond the bounds of the character, he did it with such humor that the hearty laugh dispelled the grave thoughts of criticism. The part of Batilde does not afford much scope for the powers of Signora Coradori. Madame Camporese as Amalia, displayed a melowness of sentiment and feeling which powerfully affected those around; in the solo of In quel cor, and the piece which follows—Forga non han le lagrime, she sang with great spirit and taste. The quartett, Cielo! il mio labro, was exquisitely sung. This Opera is by G. Pacini, and though much of the music is borrowed, particularly from Rossini, it is extremely delightful.

DRURY LANE.

LAST night was produced the new "Tragedy" called, Owen, Prince of Powys, or, Welch Fends. The principal characters were as follows:—

|                                    |                |
|------------------------------------|----------------|
| King Henry .....            | Mr. FOOTE.     |
| Lord Powis .....            | Mr. POPE.      |
| Cadogan .....               | Mr. POWELL.    |
| Owen, Prince of Powys ..... | Mr. KEAN.      |
| Madoc .....                 | Mr. COOPER.    |
| Tudor .....                 | Mr. PENLEY.    |
| Gerald .....                | Mr. BARNARD.   |
| Theodora .....              | Miss EDMISTON. |

THE PLOT.

King Henry having entered Wales to chastise the rebellious natives holds his Court there, and is attended by several Welch chieftains, Gerald, a Norman Knight, represents Owen, Prince of Powys, (son of Lord Powys, who is present) as the most daring opponent of the English power, and Henry accordingly orders a keen pursuit of him, and a reward for his being taken or killed: and gives consent to Gerald's union with Theodora, who has been betrothed to Owen. Lord Powys represses his feelings at these indignities, and to shew his seeming readiness to submit to Henry's will, invites Gerald, Theodora, and her father, to a banquet in his castle. Theodora is in the mean time mourning the absence, and dangers attending Owen, when Madoc a kinsman of that chieftain, expresses his love for her, which she indignantly rejects. At the banquet which follows, Owen at the head of his troops suddenly appears—he learns that his Theodora is the destined bride of another, and as the only means of securing their union, bears her off, Madoc seeks them out in their retreat, and under pretence of the imminent danger surrounding Owen and his followers, contrives to get the Chieftain's consent that Theodora should for a time take refuge in his Castle. Thither she is borne, and Madoc there presses his suit, which she scorns. The false friend then determines on her death, and directs Tudor, one of his dependants, to cast her into the sea. But Tudor's life had been saved by Owen, and gratitude induces him to preserve her, and to deceive Madoc, who finds out Owen, and informs him that she was false to his love, and had sought the arms of another, to pass her days in rural tranquillity.—

This is the first blow that Madoc inflicts on the hero's peace—he subsequently murders the aged Powys, and burns his Castle—then endeavours to destroy Owen under his own roof, but he is saved by the sudden appearance of Theodora, whom Madoc, for a moment, considers as her spirit—the lovers are rescued—but fresh dangers await them in the field of battle where Madoc follows. Theodora is mortally wounded, and dies in Owen's arms intreating him to live for his country. The Prince maddened at his wrongs, and by his private griefs, rushes towards the foe, but returns a conqueror only to yield his breath in telling that Madoc in the conflict insidiously gave him a mortal wound, which he returned with a death-blow on the monster's head. He then expires exulting in the preservation of his native land

We cannot call this Play a "Tragedy"—it is too dignified a title for it: yet it has poetical beauties, with great faults in the characters and arrangement of the incidents. To-morrow we shall say more of it. There was a very slight opposition to its announcement for to-night.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS House was very indifferently attended last night. Previous to the hour of half-price admittance, the Pit was not more than two-thirds filled, and the Boxes and Galleries were as indifferently so. Miss F. Brunton's repetition of the character of Juliet did not alter the opinion we had imbibed of her talents since their first exhibition. The want of prominent female talent on the London boards, has induced the managers to transplant from the country hot-beds where they are reared, the first shoots of merit which appear, and ere they have acquired a native firmness, like exotics, they are culled for admiration, but soon sicken, wither, and decay. We think that Miss F. Brunton's advancement to the London boards has been too premature. The natural impediment of her voice will ever bar the entrance to the temple of exalted fame; and the absence of every natural expression of tenderness is not calculated to excite that sympathy of sentiment, which should exist between the performer and auditor. We shall suspend all further judgment till we see her in another character. As to our opinion of Mr. Macready's Romeo, we must refer our readers to our 71th number. Mrs. Sterling and Mr. Horrebow, as Lady Capulet, and "the man of wax," were extremely bad; the latter looked like an awkward recruit. The Dirge was well arranged, though the introduction of the four Charley's, in their red night-caps and huge watch-coats, was not quite apropos.

This day being the anniversary of "the martyrdom of King Charles," no dramatic representation will take place at either of the Theatres; but "A Grand Performance of Antient and Modern Music" will be given at Covent Garden, under the direction of Mr. BOCHSA, who appears; from the annexed Bill of Performance, to have exerted himself greatly to obtain a host of talent, both vocal and instrumental. In noticing this musical treat, we deviate somewhat from our strict line, and, therefore, do not pledge ourselves to continue to pay similar attention to the Oratorios during Lent.

COVENT GARDEN.

This Theatre was last night extremely full; and its several divisions presented a uniformity of appearance with respect to the number of their occupiers, not very frequently seen of late, though this Theatre has been generally very well attended. The performances excited more than their usual meed of approbation, for the applause in many parts was tumultuous. A very proper sentiment was expressed by the reflecting and sensible portion of the audience on the loudly demanded repetition of the disgusting song of "Young Lobski." To such of our readers as have heard that song, little will be necessary to prove how much Mr. Fawcett, as Manager of the Theatre, lowered himself by even conforming to custom, when it demanded a sacrifice of the respectability of the profession, and the delicacy of the assembled auditors. To such as have not heard the song, the two following lines from it will prove how highly calculated it is for the ears of females, whether wives, sisters, or daughters.—"To such then, as are frail in the flesh"—and—but we will not proceed further. If it be a hit with Mr. Fawcett, such arts 'tis time that he left off. Did a mere performer sing it, we might feel for the necessity under which he was placed, but Mr. F.'s privileges might with impunity be here exerted. A person in the Gallery was so delighted with a sentiment which Mr. Young, as Dar an expressed, that, to the great amusement of the audience, he roared out—"Bravo Young!"

DRURY LANE.

The new Tragedy of Owen, Prince of Powys, or, Welsh Feuds, of which we yesterday gave the plot, was repeated last night. This drama will not, we think, long hold possession of the stage. The story presents nothing but the common incidents of a state of civil broil, and of the hacknied themes of love, heroism, generosity, and malignity. It is, moreover, not well conducted, being too abrupt and melo-dramatic; which latter term may be explained—rapidity of action for the sake of scenic effect—an attempt that makes the development of character depend on situation, rather than on sentiment elicited by the combined circumstances of the piece. Inaccuracies of this kind often occur. The language in general is good—some speeches merited and received loud applause. We imagine the author is a young man; and, if so, there is from this specimen of his talents, reason to expect something superior from his pen. Mr. KEAN confers on Owen the impression of his talents, which gives currency to what would hardly be endured in other hands. Mr. COOPER acted Madoc tolerably well.

Miss EDMISTON made Theodora, highly interesting—in the scene where she rejects the offers of Madoc, and is dragged off by Tudor to the precipice, great applause was bestowed on her.

THE ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.

The Opera of Il Barone di Dolsheim was, last night, well received by a numerous audience.

Theatre Royal, Covent Garden.

The Nobility, Gentry, & the Public, are respectfully acquainted, that the

THE ANNIVERSARY OF KING CHARLES'S MARTYRDOM.

WE can assure our readers that we have suffered no martyrdom of our feelings at being cut off (by the anniversary of King Charles's beheading) from the mimic world within the walls of Drury. Although our critical functions were thus suspended, we are happy to say we have endured none of the torments of a defunct being who has to render a long and terrible account of his misdeeds. We trust that we are not over-righteous in our own opinion, yet on looking back from our late day of rest, at all our past works, we cannot justly accuse ourselves of any base or malignant conduct that should put us in the hands of an accusing spirit. To those who, from experience, have an idea of the arduous duty we have had to perform, in sitting nightly in a hot theatre for several hours, listening and gazing at what we have heard and seen a hundred times over, we need not expatiate on the amount of our conscientious patience. But such who so seldom have the agreeable opportunity of seeing a play as to consider it impossible for any person to be tired out with this species of amusement, we beg to refer their comprehension, if they happen to be citizens, to their being obliged, day after day, to witness the Lord Mayor's shew, and then we will beg to ask them, if a surfeit of sights is not likely to ensue. Certainly, the comparison may be a little out of joint occasionally, as in the theatre we are not always entertained with men in armour, and, now and then, have what is rather a scarce commodity amongst Aldermen and Common-Council-men, namely, wit. But enough of this—we'll to our holy work again."—Hem!—Shakspeare.

COVENT GARDEN.

In our yesterday's number, we gave the bill of, and a few general remarks upon, the amusements which this Theatre last night offered. In doing this, as we announced to our readers, we deviated from the plan upon which our work was first established, by annexing to it the notices of entertainments not strictly dramatical. Of the absence of theatrical performances last night, we erred by not stating to our subscribers in our 74th Number, and thereby preventing any disappointment which might occur from our not publishing upon yesterday, to avoid which seeming neglect we chose rather to assume a privilege to which we had not bound ourselves. The amusements which Mr.

Bochsa had prepared for the public, were amply repaid by their support; for we do not remember ever witnessing the assemblage of a more numerous audience at this Theatre than it last night contained. Ere the performances commenced, the Pit was full, and immediately after the half-price admission, all the other parts were correspondingly so. An orchestra had been prepared with great taste for the occasion. It was of an octagonal form, festooned; a very splendid ceiling representing the Heavens, and from which were suspended six imitations of chandeliers. The centre was filled by a resemblance of an organ, and the seats, piano, and stands, were arranged with due uniformity. On such an occasion, to speak of the few defects which were evinced by any of the performers, would not be liberal: we shall, therefore, with pleasure only allude to those exertions which struck us as being most conspicuous.

Mrs. Salmon in the air, "Rejoice greatly" gave very brilliant testimonies of the greatness of those talents, upon which as a concert singer her fame is founded: there was a melody of tone, a chasteness of style, and a brilliancy of effect, in her execution of that piece of music, which produced from the audience loud approbation, and a very strong effort to obtain an encore. Mr. Lindley on the Violincello, executed a piece of music with his wonted skill, and introduced one or two scotch airs with the happiest effect.

A selection from "Moses in Egypt," a sacred Oratorio, or Opera of Rossini's produced at the Theatre san Carlos, a composition of a very brilliant description, next followed. Madame Begnis sang with great sweetness and effect, and met with very tumultuous approbation. The duetto of "Io di tutto mi contento," was sang with considerable spirit, and received a warm encore. The duetto, "Quei ochetto" between Madame Camporese and Signor Ambrogetti, was likewise encored; and Handel's "Sweet bird" sung by Miss Stephens, and accompanied on the Violin by Mr. Morri, was well deserving of the applaus bestowed upon it. Attwood's Coronation Anthem, was executed with good effect. The composer was a favorite pupil of Mozart's: our limits will not permit us to offer a further remark: but upon the whole the performances were well executed; though neither the chorusses nor band were of the description calculated to give proper effect to the music selected.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS Theatre was last night most numerously attended. The dress circle, pit, and galleries were quite full, and the upper circles of Boxes were more than two-thirds filled. If Fortune, in a capricious mood, takes not a flight, the present season may vie in success with any since the erection of the Establishment. The attendance at this House has not only been (generally speaking) unprecedented, but obtained by the managers at a most inconsiderate risk & expence. On reference to the Indexes of our last two volumes, we perceive that the chief, and we may say sole attractions of the season, have been the Exile, the Two Gentlemen of Verona, and the Pantomime. The former has been represented for 39 nights, the Two Gentlemen 24, and the last mentioned entertainment has already been performed 31 nights. With the exception of the Pantomime, expence has not been incurred by either dresses, scenery, or the numerous et ceteras which swell the Treasury bills on the production of most new pieces. Those we have mentioned, were old ones vamped up for the occasion; and the managers, like apple women at their stalls, stuck upon their savoury gingerbread a piece of gilding here, and a few comfits there, which soon attract the eye, and gratify the honeyed taste of the youthful palate.—The expenses of the Establishment must this season be upon rather a reduced scale, from the absence of Mr. C. Kemble, of a principal male vocal performer, and of several other superior, as well as inferior actors. But a liberal—we wish we could say enlightened policy, generally marks the proceedings of this Theatre, and the cause of the deviation from the wish which we have just expressed, arises from the study, and encouragement, and not the correction, of a vitiated public taste. Shakspeare's play of the Tempest was the chief attraction of last evening. This piece is generally admitted to be one of the happiest efforts of its great Author's genius. In it, he has soared above the narrow limits of dramatic rules, and while bending to the sway of reason, has fixed his throne amidst the realms of fancy. It is supposed to have been one of his latest works, and the originality of the plot is generally yielded to him; and though the introduction of demons, sprites, and elves, may not accord with the modern notions of dramatic propriety, the prevailing sentiments for such representations in the age in which their Master lived, renders their introduction, even upon that score, most excusable.

Mr. Young performed Prospero with a happier success than on the previous night of its representation; there was a greater variety in his style, marked with stronger rays of feeling. We are extremely happy to state that Miss M. Tree in addition to the delight which her performance of the vocal and acting parts of the character of Ariel created, associated with it even a higher claim to our approbation, by resuming in her dress the character of the delicate female, in the personification of the dramatic spirit. By such ladies never deviating in their public capacities, from the received ideas of society, which they uphold and adorn in their private ones, the profession of the Stage becomes truly honorable. Let those who in retired life, overleap the laws of modesty and virtue, be (if the public will sanction it) the first (if not the only) to assume in their profession the appearance of the vices which sully their private characters; but let those who are estimable members of society, be the last to approach within the shadow of a dereliction, from the refinement of their truer selves. Should a repetition of The Tempest take place, we would advise Miss Hallande to devote a little time to the study of the music. Mr. Duruset performed with considerable propriety and effect. The part of Dorinda was admirably performed by Miss Stephens; and what little of the vocal duty of the evening was hers, she executed with her usual success.

DRURY LANE.

The Pirate, The Liar, and The Coronation, were performed last night to a tolerably good house. Mr. ELLLTON'S Young Wilding is an amusing performance.

---

On Saturday last the Theatre at Cheltenham was opened for one night only, with the play of The Heir at Law. The Cheltenham Chronicle, in a part of its criticism, says with regard to Colonel Berkeley, who performed, "But our business is now with Dick Dowlas, and never did Colonel Berkeley, more effectually sustain the accomplished "wild-duck shooting, bar-throwing, punch-making, cricket-playing, and love-making lawyer's clerk," than on Saturday evening. On his entre his reception was enthusiastic;—and the warmest applause marked his talented performance throughout."

DRURY LANE.

THE Play of Owen, Prince of Powys, was performed for the third time last night. It goes off no better than it did the first evening, and notwithstanding the language and action, is a drama only to be tolerated some short space, so long as Mr. KEAN condescends to forget Richard, Othello, and Lear, in enacting the melo-dramatic part of Owen. For our part we are somewhat impatient to see him again in one of those mind-improving characters of the divine Bard, for it is hardly possible we could be much fatigued with witnessing any of his efforts, however frequently they have been repeated before us.

The interest of the Manager, we suspect, will soon aid our wishes, and cause him without much loss of time to again grace his house with Shakespeare's genius, that to the latest days will be the source of Theatrical profit, and intellectual gratification. The author of Owen, will do well to study the developement of character through all the refinements and variations it is susceptible of, instead of exhibiting a bare rude outline of the common passions, in which action holds more sway of interest than thought. Some disapprobation occurred at the conclusion. The musical Entertainment of Paul and Virginia is quite a treat. The acting, singing, and scenery, are excellent. If the Manager had produced this piece at Christmas, instead of the ridiculous farago of Giovanni in Ireland, it would have been preferred by every one to the absurdities of a Pantomime, and parents would have brought their children to partake with themselves in the delightful associations, the innocent gaiety, the tenderness, and moral, with which it is fraught. We remember the tears we shed in our youth on reading St. Pierre's moving tale of Paul and

Virginia; and, although the drama is necessarily a deviation from the original story, yet enough is retained to call up the memory of past sensations.

We are sorry to say the House was poorly attended.

MISS S. BOOTH makes her first appearance on this stage to-night, as Mariette, in the drama of Therese. This interesting actress is too well known to a London audience not to cause them to rejoice at her return to a theatre worthy of her agreeable talents. Miss S. Booth, we believe, was first distinguished at Liverpool; she was afterwards engaged at the Surrey Theatre, and from thence came to Covent Garden, where she long was a distinguished favourite; but Mr. Harris required her services at his new Theatre in Dublin, and there she went and gave great satisfaction. On her late return to London, she has appeared for a few nights at the Surrey and Olympic, and at length is placed in a situation more congenial to her talents, where we hope often to have the pleasure of seeing her, as she is equally meritorious in her private conduct, as in her public capacity.

COVENT GARDEN.

A numerous and genteel audience again attended this house, last night, to see The Two Gentlemen of Verona, and the Pantomime. nothing new occurred in the performances.

A new Opera is preparing here, founded on the Legend of Montrose. It is to be called Montrose, or the Children of the Mist. The subject affords much room for an energetic drama, and for the display of beautiful scenery. Really managers ought to present Sir Walter Scott with a Piece of Plate.

DRURY LANE.

On Saturday evening, after the Pirate, the melodrama called The-rese was performed, and introduced Miss S. BOOTH on this stage; as Mariette. It is almost superfluous to say, this lady was greeted with a hearty welcome. There must have been many persons in the house who, like ourselves, witnessed her early performances at Covent Garden Theatre, and could not forget first impressions, which were so strongly in her favour that she at once became a leading attraction. In characters of feeling, or of rivacity, she always gives delight; yet it is in a very different manner from Miss KELLY, whose celebrity in a certain line of the pathetic and the humorous, will last with the history of the stage.

Miss Booth in the expression of tender sentiment, or juvenile innocence, surpasses the former lady, but in giving effect to high-wrought feeling, she certainly must yield to her. We know not of any actress that can so powerfully interest in parts of the latter nature, as Miss Kelly.—She appears the very being she represents; and every throb of fear, or look of solicitude, seems the genuine impulse of her own breast. Miss Booth as Mariette, wins on us by less potent means than Miss Kelly; she reaches our feelings by an inferior intellectual exertion, and we are moved by her scenes of distress in some degree, by external circumstances; her very stature adds to the idea of helplessness and timidity, and makes her more an object of pity and regard.

The "Tragedy" of Owen, Prince of Powys, will not be acted again. In recording its failure, we would add our belief that the author is capable of producing a play meriting a better fate. Owen was no insignificant work; it exhibited strong proofs of considerable talent for dramatic writing, and had the author devoted more attention to the clear development of the plot, and rested less on the talents of the performers, in all probability, we should have had to fulfill the more pleasing duty of commendation. Every thing has been done by the Manager and the performers to give it stability.

A New Pathetic Drama, in three Acts, is announced to be produced here on Saturday next.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Opera of Rob Roy Macgregor was acted on Saturday to a good house. We have already expressed our opinion of Mr. Macready's Rob. It is not an entirely natural performance: although forcible in many parts, it does not strike us as the true representation of the bold, shrewd, proud, rough-polished Highlander. Mr. Macready is too classical—he cannot make us believe him to be a cattle-stealer—he looks at one time like a philosopher in disguise, and at another like a high-bred commander, equally fit for the closet or the field. The homely pride, the unlettered conversation, the undisciplined courage of Rob Roy, do not at all suit Mr. Macready's style of acting. Miss Stephens is a delightful Diana Vernon.

The announced arrangements for the week at this house are as follows:—

To-morrow, the Play of The Tempest. On Wednesday, The Two Gentlemen of Verona. On Thursday, The Tempest. On Friday, The Exile; to which will be added, John of Paris, Princess Navarre, (first time) Miss Halpand. On Saturday, Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors. Luctnda, Miss M. Tree, Adriana, Miss Stephens; with the Musical Entertainment of Brother and Sister.

THE ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.

Le Nozze di Figaro, with Pandore, were witnessed on Saturday night by a brilliant assemblage. The music of Mozart, is most delicious.

DRURY LANE.

We expressed our hopes on Saturday, that Mr. KEAN would soon re-appear in one of his eminent characters, and last night we were gratified by his performing GLO'STER in RICHARD THE THIRD. What can we say that would wear the shape of novelty, respecting his representation of this arduous character? Absolutely nothing--The public are already intimately acquainted with the vigour, the beauties, the defects of his style of acting; and to dwell on them as displayed in his Richard would at present be superfluous. Mr. KEAN has raised for himself a high reputation; yet he labours under the common fate of all men who have distinguished themselves—he has enemies to his fame; detractors, who, because he has imperfections, are inclined to deny him a title to any real merit; detractors, who are so from a love of differing from common opinion; detractors that detest the Successful, merely because the latter have overstepped the boundaries which they could not reach. Heaven forbid that we should deny the possibility of the existence of a conscientious opinion adverse to Mr. Kean's histrionic reputation—there may be many who do not accord with us and the great majority of the public, regarding his merits. Taste will differ. Yet we must be allowed to hold fast to our declared sentiments, in considering this gentleman singularly gifted to enforce the passions, and to render powerfully prominent the varying shades and lights of character, whereby he astonishes, interests, and impresses the mind, and keeps up a close connection between imagination and reason. It is with regret we enter into a decided protest against the performance of the Duke of Buckingham by Mr. PENLEY.

He is as unfit for such a part, as Mr. Powell is for that of Harlequin. Mr. Penley may play the walking gentleman, or the soft-pated fop, but to attempt the political tool, Buckingham, is folly in the extreme. Mr. COOPER'S Richmond is energetic, at least—he gives to the future King Harry, however, a more warlike than politic bearing, which is not exactly accordant with the character of Richmond.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Exile again attracted a good house, and The Pantomime followed: the latter entertainment has now been given for thirty-five nights, and the steady play-goers are now worn out with its mummery. Surely it is time for the Manager to make a change, and favor us with something more rational to laugh at. We are convinced from observation on the state of the House, at first and half-price, that the Pantomime has nearly ceased to attract; but it would appear that so long as there are attractive first pieces, there is no exertion made for conferring a full measure of proper entertainment. A good Christmas Harlequinade might be permitted to run for three weeks, whilst our children are from school, but to offer such a species of amusement nightly for three weeks longer, is paying a wretched compliment to the part of the public possessing taste and good sense.

DRURY LANE.

THERE was a thin house, last night, to see The Pirate, The Liar, and The Coronation. This indifferent attendance may partly be ascribed to the threatening gale during the day, which overturned chimney-pots and Mr. Elliston's hopes of an audience at one and the same time: for he must have been convinced, ere this, that The Pirate had not been able, in fair weather, to bring the guns of Fortune's Favourite to bear on any rich prize during its cruise on the ocean of Drury, and, therefore, he could not expect much success in foul. Captain Cleveland and Jack Gough cannot, in fact, command hands enough to carry on the war; Magnus Troil and his deep-sea boatmen cannot catch that floundering whale, the Public; even the two pretty, sweet singing, Miss Troils, cannot get lovers enough; and Norna's spells have no power to bring within her magic circle congregated thousands; nor can she, with all her mysterious chiding, divest the black-looking elements in the Pit of their alarming proofs of a gathering storm. A sullen breeze from that quarter proclaimed the coming danger, and the sun of good-humour was for a moment obscured when the whole crew appeared at the finale. We suspect that The Pirate will soon go to Davy Jones's Locker in good earnest.

Mr. ELLISTON, in the farce, played Young Wilding humourously; but that rascally engraver, Time, has cut so many lines in his face that he is but an indifferent representative of a young gentleman. Vivacity and comic point are always to be found in Mr. E., and as the Liar, he fibs, or rather poetises, with most agreeable audacity. Mr. GARTNER is really a very good Papillon—his shrugs, and correcting and reprehending twitches, and utter shame and distress at his master's blunders, were very comically given. Mrs. EBAIX, as the coquetting

Miss Grantham, was very gay—and Miss SIMPSON, as the uninitiated Miss Godfrey, was a very sweet-looking young lady in white silk, but it was a pity she came abroad in the Park without her scarf.—We will not attribute this to a disinclination on her part to deprive us of the pleasure of beholding her symmetry; she, however, should be careful to avoid the appearance of a negligent display.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Play of The Tempest, which was the first performance of yesterday evening, did not draw quite so numerous an audience as on its late representations. The seats of the Pit, however, were filled, and the Dress Boxes well attended, but the Upper Circles and the Galleries were less plentifully supplied.

Those, who summoned by public duties, or urged by the habits of fashionable life, now leave their groves and parks to enter the political arena, or the gay circles of the metropolis, may be expected to grace occasionally our principal Theatres. That they ought to patronise them is certain; for where should the Drama find more powerful supporters than amongst the highly educated and the wealthy classes? When genius fills the stage, they should lend their aid and countenance to its efforts, and endeavour to restore a just public taste, which has been injured by the eye-pleasing exhibitions to which the managers have paid and drawn so much attention that one of the first things thought of by an audience is the scenery, rather than the sense of the dialogue.

Appropriate scenery certainly is a great embellishment; and we may make some allowance for a smoke-dried cockney's ecstatic delight at beholding a rural moonlight view, or the rising sun tipping mountains with his golden beams, considering how rarely he beholds these exhibitions of nature; yet those who have more recently contemplated them, may find there is no call for such enthusiastic feeling, which had better be bestowed on the soft images of the Poet, or the brilliant display of his effulgent fancy.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN does what the whole force of The Pirate cannot effect—he fills the coffers of his commander, and brings the Drama safe into port, without any symptoms of having encountered a storm. In plain language, there was a numerous and elegant audience, last night, in this Theatre to see his Othello, which is a performance of infinite merit. The applause was frequent, and, in general, well directed; and at the close was conferred in a most animated manner. Mr. Elliston must now be conscious that his only course to ensure success is to rely on Mr. Kean and Miss Edmiston for at least three days in the week, and for the other three to trust to himself, Mr. Munden, Mr. Harley, Mr. Knight, Miss Kelly, Mrs. Edwin, Miss Booth, &c. &c. who form a comic host that are not equalled at any other Theatre. If to these means of attraction, he adds Madame Vestris, Mrs. Bland, Miss Cubitt, Miss Povey, Mr. T. Cooke, &c. in light operatic after-pieces; such an agreeable diversity would be afforded as must attract, if any thing dramatic can.

We observe the announced "Petit Comedy, Love in Humble Life," which was to have been acted to-night, is withdrawn. This vacillation is bad. The Manager should never advertise a new piece, until his judgment has been fully confirmed at rehearsal. Perhaps, however, we are to be favoured with Love in Humble Life on some other occasion. Yet this indecision, as to the time of representation, indicates very indifferent management, for to disappoint the public even in trivial matters, begets an impatience and contempt which is dangerous on occasions where new exertions are made to attract.

Mr. KEAN is preparing for his appearance as Sir Pertinax Macsycophant, in THE MAN OF THE WORLD. This character has not been played with any high effect since the late Mr. COOKE acted it. Cooke both looked and spoke the part inimitably—his features were well adapted to represent a Scot, having an aquiline nose and high cheek bones, and much resembled Mr. Meredith, of Drury Lane Theatre; his northern dialect was so very correct, that Scotsmen felt none of that disgust which bad imitators occasion. We are convinced that Mr. Kean will act Sir Pertinax very well, but we much fear he will fail in the broad rich twang that marked Cooke's pronunciation, and be thought to have a less effective countenance than this last great representative of the Man from the land o'cakes.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Pit, Dress Boxes, and Galleries, were well attended last night, although the often-repeated Two Gentlemen of Verona, and the Pantomime, were the entertainments. It would appear, from the present circumstance of good houses taking place, even when it might be supposed the patience of the public were worn out by the long continuance of similar performances, that there exists a sufficient stock of new audiences to meet the repetition. This, however, is not the case at all times. It depends on events over which Managers have no controul: such as an occasional increased influx of strangers to the metropolis; or to the state of public affairs recalling absentees. Thus the meeting of Parliament is of itself sufficient to account for many new attendances at the theatres in all parts of them; and the fresh arrived family, from the master, or at least the mistress, down to the Groom and Mrs. Betty, are to be found amongst the unsophisticated admirers of the drama of the night, be it any thing coming under the sanction of Shakspeare's name, opera-ized or merely darned and pieced in the dialogue by John Kemble, or by John Dryden, &c.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE play of the Tempest, which was last evening acted at this Theatre, drew to it a very numerous audience. The Dress Circle, the Pit, and Galleries, were well filled; the upper Boxes were rather indifferently so. The character of Prospero admits not of much scope for the finesse of acting (if we may so term it), or, in other terms, for the production of that "dramatic effect" which emanates from the subtilties of the art, and the variety of passion, shade and circumstance; yet it was more effectively sustained by Mr. Young last night, than on any similar occasion on which we have witnessed his performance of it. The language of this part is energetic and poetical, yet in the individual there are not those gradual developments of character, which claim our attention and interest, nor those deep-toned chords and subtle harmonies of composition, which struck upon, reverberates in sympathetic accents through the spectator's soul. Upon the whole, we could peruse it with much pleasure in our closets—our passions remaining uninfluenced—our taste and reason both improved. In a former number we expressed our surprise that Miss Stephens, who, to the language of the senses is capable of giving such effect, expressing by it each variety of sentiment, and addressing the heart with a truth, energy and pathos, often to words denied, should, as an actress, in the general line of characters which she sustains, fail of portraying even the intention of their authors. The general truth of this observation we still adhere to, but we are happy to notice one style, of acting in which this lady now and then displays talent, nay, excels—yet it is almost paradoxical to our former statement when we observe, that this line is at once the most difficult, for 'tis the most natural; 'tis that which art alone cannot with truth effect, for art is inconsistent with the character in which artless innocence, in feature, gesture, and in language, must be displayed. Bertranda in The Tempest: Sylvia in Cymon: and similar parts we consider Miss Stephens' chef d'ouvres. Mr. Egerton was a most respectable King of Naples—but with your self-important roll, and waspish delivery, Oh! Mr. Chapman, Mr. Chapman, oh!

The new Opera entitled Montrose; or the Children of the Mist, is to be produced on Tuesday next; it is cast thus---Earl of Montrose, Mr. Connor; Earl of Monteith, Mr. Daruset; Angus Macaulay, Mr. Comer; Allan Macaulay, Mr. Abbott; Evan Dhu, Mr. Hunt; Donald, Mr. Taylor; Captain Dalgetty, Mr. Liston; Duke of Argyle, Mr. Chapman; Sir Duncan Campbell, Mr. Egerton; Colin, Mr. J. Isaacs; Ronald of the Miel, Mr. Yates; Lewie, Master Longhurst; Erorcht, Mrs. Faucit; Annot Lyla, Miss Stephens.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN's Lear, and Miss EDMISTON's Cordelia, drew last night, a numerous and genteel audience. The former gains on us in the character of the abused old monarch—practice and study are able to surmount many defects, and Mr. Kean has lost no opportunities they afford. He is, indeed, indefatigable in maintaining his high reputation, and in thus promoting the welfare of the great establishment to which he is attached, and which, in a great measure, is dependant on his successful exertions. The reflection that he is so large a contributor, by his exerted talents, to the prosperity of several hundred persons, must be no small gratification to his feelings. But however eminent, and however beneficial his services to the theatre, we cannot view the large-letter manner in which his name is printed in the play-bills, as consistent with the good feeling that should exist amongst the performers, some of whom in their line are as meritorious and distinguished as Mr. Kean. For instance.—Mr. MUNDEN.—Surely he, or Mr. ELLISTON, or Mr. HARLEY, or Mr. KNIGHT—when either assumes one of his first-favorite comic characters, has a right to Double Pica letters for his name in the Play bill, as well as the TRAGIC hero. Mr. Kean's attraction does not depend on the size of a type; but he is rather injured by the distinction thus conferred on him—for John Bull's generous feelings incline him to sneer at those who have honors bestowed that are not granted to others equally deserving of them for their particular merits.

THE gentleman who usually reports the proceedings at this Theatre being seriously indisposed, we are unable to enter into any particulars relative to the performances last night; but we are informed that there was a good house. An arrangement has been entered into with a gentleman of very considerable talent and experience in dramatic affairs, to fulfill the requisite duties under this head.

DRURY LANE.

Last night a respectable audience attended the performance of Macbeth and Monsieur Tonson.

This establishment would flourish with credit to its Managers, and advancement to the cause of the genuine Drama, were it conducted on consistent principles. If Mr. ELLISTON firmly rested his interests on the substantial grounds of presenting nothing but what could claim the attention of the tasteful and judicious, he would soon bring the public at large to the general support of his Theatre. But it would appear, that instead of alternately giving us Tragedy and Comedy, or Opera, we are threatened with the intermixture of one of those maukish, non-descript pieces, called Melo-drama

The sometime announced "Pathetic Drama" is to be brought forth to-night, and if it succeeds, we, no doubt, shall see as much of it as we did of that trashy, be-robber'd affair, Gerald's Duval, to the exclusion of sterling comedy, and the admirable acting therein of Mr. MUNDEN, &c., &c., who, except some Interlude or Farce admits the partial exhibition of their comic powers, may put on their night-caps after dinner for the next month or two. We, however, feel much obliged to the Manager for having informed us in the Play-bills, that the new piece of this evening is a "Pathetic Drama." This notice must have been of considerable convenience to the public, as they have been enabled, no doubt, to get properly supplied with pocket-handkerchiefs. But in case of a deficiency of these articles amongst the audience, we would suggest to the orange-women to speculate on a few cambrick ones for the ladies, and some bandannoes for the gentlemen: and, lest these might prove insufficient to absorb the expected flood of tears, a stock of sponges should be added. Mops will be required in the Galleries. We have been often informed by Managers that they had a "serious" drama to produce, but the recent announcement of the present piece as being pathetic, is a proof that there exists behind the scenes an absolute certainty of a heart-breaking effect. We trust, no one in the house will presume to grin---and, if a horse-laugh occurs, we beg the nearest constable to drag the offender out of the house as a "factions" rascal;---for the audience will take notice that this piece not being an "Extravaganza," they are not protected by a hearty laugh from being deemed disturbers of the public peace---nothing but tears, sobs, and sighs, are on this occasion considered orderly.

DRURY LANE.

On Saturday evening a new Serious Melo-drama was acted here, for the first time, entitled ADELINE. Although there was this novelty, together with the amusing piece of Three Weeks after Marriage, and the delightful musical entertainment of Paul and Virginia, most extraordinary to say, there never has been so thin an audience in this house throughout the season! At first price, the Pit did not contain more than would fill three benches; the Dress Boxes had gaps of utter vacuum, and not more in the other parts than would fill the front row all round; the first and second circles were still worse attended, and the Galleries were on a par with the Pit! The half-price did not bring twenty pounds! It would appear from this, that Fame had not sounded her trumpet in favour of the new piece---and, perhaps, she was better employed.

The story of the new Melo-drama is as follows:---

Adeline (Miss Copeland), the amiable daughter and sole prop of a blind and brave old soldier (Mr. Cooper), has received instructions in drawing and in love, from a young man passing under the name of Fabian (Mr. Penley), who at length induces her to marry him unknown to her father, and then confides her to the close custody of a friend (Mr. Thompson), but, alas! the ceremony is but a mock one, the friend but another betrayer! Poor Adeline, thus strangely secluded, and insulted during Fabian's absence, is bewildered and alarmed. The gardener (Mr. Knight), of the chateau where she is confined, feels for her situation, and resolves to afford her assistance. Fabian, who is no less a personage than Count Wilda, visits the chateau with his friend, who is Baron (Somebody). The Baron deters him from seeing Adeline, and induces him to depart for his own residence to quiet the suspicions of his Countess---for he is a married man! The faithless friend now feels secure of his prey; but the Gardener having climbed the walls, returns by the same means at a critical moment for the abused fair one---obtains the key of the gate, and admits for her relief, not a body of police, nor even a dozen stout country fellows, but the aged blind father with a trusty sword by his side! The Baron laughs at the opposing force, and, after a wrestling-match with the little gardener, seizes the trembling Adeline to drag her into the chateau; but the active tree-pruner having, no doubt, mislaid his gardening knife, draws the blind soldier's weapon, and attacks the ravisher, who is compelled to witness the escape of the whole party. The anxious old father naturally enquires of Adeline the cause of her strange absence; but she has now doubts of the good-faith of Fabian, and conceals the truth. An interview takes place between the lovers—she discovers her ruin—he is all contrition and despair for having completed the baseness yesterday which he had been two years deliberately plotting. The countess his wife approaches—he conceals himself—she at first frowns on the unhappy Adeline, but learning the deceptions practised on her, she commiserates her fate, and take her and her old father away to her own residence. Here are fetes, plots, and counter-plots. A Prince is expected—accordingly there is jigging—and the base Baron being also of the party, is anxious to remove Adeline and her father, but the Prince over-hears all, and counteracts the villain's design, in and vain endeavours to soothe the heart-broken girl, who taking one last look at her seducer, rushes to a bridge, and dashes head-long into the stream below—nearly expiring, she is dragged out and borne by the attendants, to her blind father's arms, who receives her kneeling in prayer—she expires in his embrace, and the woe-stricken veteran dies clasping his child—the Count, conscious-struck, attempts his life, but is disarmed, whilst all express their feelings at the horror of the scene.

This melo-drama, it will be seen, is most gloomy in plot—but it is also most barren of incident, and ineffective and absurd in its general construction. Miss COPELAND acted admirably; she has the whole burthen of interest on herself, which affords the only chance of the existence of the piece for a short period. The translator's friends may be said to have composed the whole house—accordingly the applause was unanimous. The piece is of French origin.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Comedy of Errors, and the melo-drama of The Blind Boy, were the performances of Saturday evening, and attracted to this House a very numerous audience. The Boxes were full; the Pit an overflow; and the Galleries respectable.

THE ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.

Rossini's Comic Opera, Il Turco in Italia, was performed on Saturday night, to a crowded and brilliant house. Signor and Madame RONZI, maintained the effect of the piece most admirably. Signor CARTONI as the Turk, executed the part with considerable satisfaction to the audience. PLACCI is very amusing as the Poet.

EIGHT-PENNY CRITICISM.

A sapient weekly print, entitled THE LITERARY GAZETTE, and JOURNAL OF THE BELLES LETTRES, in its last number, condescended to notice The Theatrical Observer, under the witty head of "PENNY CRITICISM." After some expressions of alarm at our incursion into the province of Criticism, and disdain at our array, The Literary Gazette describes the form and matter of our publication. Its learned Editor then, gives his wig a twitch, rubs his brows, looks solemn, and begins to perform his critical duty. He fastens first on a sentence respecting Mrs. Tenant—and calls it "fine writing were it only intelligible." We readily confess the incorrectness of the construction of the quoted sentence, and we believe we could point out many others in our pages equally defective in this respect. Yet some apology may be offered for errors of this description, for be it known, that we often write half-a-sleep after the fatigue of sitting out a noisy, gaudy, uninspiring performance. But if our Penny Criticism be sometimes obscure, what will the public think of Eight-penny Criticism equally dark?—We, whose lucubrations are limited to some half-hour past midnight, may be excused for occasional mistification in our style; but the learned writer of a Weekly Journal of The Belles Lettres, who has seven days to scribble as much original matter as occupies us not seven hours altogether, and who retails his wisdom at eight times our cost, surely should be a paragon of correctness, and as luminous as the rays that surround Apollo's pericranium: yet lo! and behold!--in the very article of this Helicon Gazette, now under our eye, we find mist predominant. The learned Editor says:

"The Pirate is more recently submitted to the ordeal of the censor, and he reproves Mr. Pope for looking so like a well-whipped school-boy in his expression of extreme grief, that it always makes the critic smile. By this his gravity is proclaimed, for in such cases every body else must laugh."

We confess our utter inability to divine the meaning, be it solemn wisdom, or smirking satire, of the last sentence. Whose gravity is proclaimed? What causes are meant? The learned Critic has done with us in the following terms, for which we doff our Caps to his Worship.

"We will not tire our readers with any more observations on this Observer: and though he is a poacher on our domain, we will do him the justice to say that his publications are rendered so much more useful by a tolerable analysis of the plots of new pieces, the names of the characters, and other intelligence, that we cannot help admitting them to be superior to the bills heretofore accepted. That he is fertile is evident: for he has filled his usual space with criticisms all this week, and we (so stale do all the performances appear to us) have not a word to throw at a dog---not even Liston's in the "Two Gentlemen," i. e. the Dog and he."

DRURY LANE.

We are happy to state that the Pit and Galleries of this house were full last night: the Boxes, however, were but thinly attended. Brutus was performed with much effect; and was followed by Giovanni in London, which, surprising to say, still has attractions! Madame VESTRIS, HARLEY, and the old favourite airs, give a character to this Extravaganza that buoys it up in spite of its pointless dialogue. It is near a-kin to Pantomime, but has the advantage of that species of entertainment, by possessing some humorous satire on the follies of the world. By this time Madame Vestris must be so familiarized to the assumption of the male character, that she, no doubt, makes many blunders in her manners---a bow for a courtesy---a strut for a mincing step---a bold look for a modest expression---a compliment to a fair lady, instead of a cut at the gentlemen---possibly a demme instead of a Lord! or Oh la!---a challenge in place of a---Get you gone, naughty man!---and, Heaven bless the mark! a box on the ear, instead of a tap of the fan!

COVENT GARDEN.

This house was crowded last night. The Evil and the Pantomime were the performances, and both passed off with their usual effect.

On Thursday next the new Opera, called Montrose, or the Children of the Mist, is to be produced, unless there is another put-off. The managers do themselves and an author little benefit by these positive announcements, and unexplained delays. They should never disappoint the public. In the political world vassillation is considered a sure mark of a weak government, and there is no reason why, in the theatrical world, a different character should attach to the same conduct.

DRURY LANE.

THE second representation of the new serious Melo-drama called Adeline, or the Victim of Seduction, took place last night, and was witnessed by a thin audience, who paid it the most profound attention: for the nature of the story, where female innocence is the painful sufferer, carries the feelings with it in a high degree. This drama is constructed on most simple principles: and although barren of incident, and often puerile, common-place, and inaccurate in sentiment and language, yet the natural delineation of Adeline's character, sweetly and powerfully represented by Miss COPELAND, produces the effect desired without the other aids of talent. The scene where the injured girl has an interview with her lover, the supposed Fabian, is drawn with much truth; her rising suspicions of his bad faith, and at length conviction of the wrong done her, heightened by the statement of the betrayer's wife—the hopelessness of her situation—her lingering fondness for the man who has ruined her, mingled with her affection and anxiety for her old blind father, are well calculated to produce a powerful emotion.

Mr. COOPER gives a faithful portraiture of the aged veteran; he has a natural tremor of voice that suits well with the representation of old men, but he requires considerable concealment of features as his full vivacious eye, and general expression, have a stamp of youth that would belie the beaking form, the tottering limbs, and tremulous accents of age. Mr. THOMPSON is a rough-looking Baron. There is a peculiarity of manner and voice about this gentleman, that unfits him for many parts he is put into. We cannot conceive him calculated to give an agreeable effect to any character except that of a bravo, or a coarse Irishman.

Mr. KNIGHT as the serviceable Gardener, by his clever manner of delivering his speeches, makes points where there are none in the dialogue. There is not a truism, a stale sentiment, or worn-out joke that is uttered by this pleasant performer but tells, at least with the gallery-good-natured souls, who prepare to grin and applaud at the first moving of his little finger. Mr. BRIMLEY if divested of a little of that habit of precise utterance and stiff gait, would be a more satisfactory performer. He is always correct, and attends fully to his part, and so far gives due effect to his representations. As the father of Count Willin, the betrayer, he does the little confided to him with much propriety. Miss SMITHSON looks so aimable and lovely a Countess, that the crime of her husband appears deepened by the abandonment of such worth and beauty. Her pronunciation, however, is not what it ought to be—there is rather too much obvious endeavour to be correct. She should study a more natural delivery.

The second title, The Victim of Seduction, bestowed on this Melodrama, is incorrect. Adeline is not the victim of seduction, but of deception. The word seduction means to mislead from the path of rectitude. Adeline does not deviate from virtue—she believes she has married the man of her heart; her only fault is the concealment of this event from her father. She is betrayed—deceived—but not seduced. If she were the victim of seduction, she would be deprived of half the sympathy produced by her hapless fate.

COVENT GARDEN.

It is rarely the case that we have to record a poor attendance at this house, but, last night, it was very thin. The Tempest and The Two Pages of Frederick the Great were the performances, and passed off with their usual eclat.

Another Theatre in America, that at Natches, has been burnt by fanatical incendiaries.

Among our performers whom the recent files of American Journals mention as playing at New York and other places with credit, are the names of Booth, Wallack (previous to his accident), Maywood, Phillips (of Dublin), Kent, Cowell. The negro who acted Richard the Third, in the black dramatic corps, has been tried for stealing (as the wardrobe could not furnish him) the clothes in which he played the part, and sentenced to ten years hard labour in prison. "Othello's occupation's gone."

A native of Kentucky has appeared as Lady Teazle: but the chief wonder seems to be, that any actress should come from that wild region.

Mr. Croly's Tragedy of Catiline is in the press.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Two Gentlemen have at length outlived the likings of the public, and with their cotemporary the Exile, having passed that dreadful ordeal—a Treasury trial, have been condemned (as being worn out and unfit for further service) to be banished to the regions of neglect, (though, by way of a parenthesis, we beg to inform our feeling and commiserating readers that when sentence was passed upon these ill-treated and unhappy culprits, the Judge, with exemplary mercy, hinted, by way of condolence to them, that upon the first division of the House, when the question of to run, or not to run, became a subject of serious debate, their services might be again required. Mr. ABBERT announced the first appearance in public of the new Scotch favourite with a degree of extraordinary solemnity, that is--by his bow which in general lasts during and winds up the three chords of the finale, when he concludes the salutation between his chin and ruff, (which, by the bye, rather reminds us of the exploring gravitation of a diving-bell) and then resumes his first position, the perpendicular. This evolution was, as we before observed, gone through with more than usual dignity and length, and we observed very significant glances from some of the musicians to their leader, (who is well versed in the law of fines) for perceiving, that Mr. A.'s neck had not resumed its first and practised rule of grace, the stiff position, at the same moment when, with a flourish of the elbow, they had concluded their strain, very naturally supposed they had omitted a few notes, and, by an unaccountable effort and quickness of the mind, which some philosophers have designated perception, as naturally presumed they would be called on to supply the place of the said notes with as many shillings--an exchange little to their relish.

We commenced by stating that the Two Gentlemen, had outlived the public favor, we should have added also the actor's memories which but for the humane assistance of the prompter, who pulled them out by the ears, would have been food for fishes, if any there are in the waters of Lethe: this deserves to be noticed at the next meeting of the humane society. Mr. Liston seemed deeply affected by the act which separated himself, his master, and his friend; the dimness of his eyes, occasioned no doubt by too much weeping, as oblations at the altar of friendship, and the rotary motions of his legs, bespoke a poignancy of grief truly affecting. The House was miserably attended.

DRURY LANE.

The Comedy of Riches, last night, afforded Mr. KEAN an opportunity of displaying his powers in the character of Luke. It is one calculated to strike from its prominent lineaments, which are rather boldly than delicately touched. It is a rude sketch of a hypocritical and malignant being, who is as abject and mean, and apparently passionless in poverty, as he is imperious and openly profligate in prosperity. One, whose varying feelings repressed, and then lets loose, presents a wide field for the actor who has genius to seize and embody the points of similar impulse, but contrasted conduct. Mr. Kean does this in an eminent manner. His humble demeanor, and artful display of virtuous sentiment in the scene between his brother and the distressed debtors, were admirably executed. To one ignorant of the play, he must have appeared, as he did to Sir Maurice, a paragon of virtue. The next distinguished delineation was on receiving the intelligence of his brother's death, and of his being left sole heir to all his property. He, here ably marked surprise and confused thoughts, now almost doubting the fortunate change, and next convinced by the evidence of the will in his hand. His inward triumphing, and ironical fair expressions and deportment towards the City Madam---his manner of wheedling and cheating, and then of abusing and committing the unfortunate applicants for his favor---his fulness of sensual joy at the undivided possession of luxurious ease---his insolence and ingratitude towards Sir Maurice---his cruelty towards Lady Traffic and her daughters---his declared contempt of his supposed dead benefactor and brother, and, on whose sudden appearance, the horror, surprise, fear, and shame that overwhelms him---then the humble, cringing petitioning, and, on utter rejection, the spring of furious disappointment that sets loose the natural flow of his baseness, and the rage-choaking, bitter curse on his departure---all are portrayed with sharp discrimination and overwhelming force. Great applause followed his final exit. Mr. POPE as Sir John Traffic, and Mrs. EDWIN as "the City Madam" Lady Traffic, acted extremely well. ADELINE followed the Comedy with similar effect to its former representations. The House was but moderately attended.

COVENT GARDEN.

This House was last night crowded; and from the approbation bestowed upon the novel attraction of the evening—the Opera of Montrose; or, the Children of the Mist, we anticipate frequent renewals. It is scarcely necessary to apprise our readers that the piece was selected from Sir Walter Scott's novel of "The Legend of Montrose," the latter having been dramatised with considerable truth, in respect to the preservation of the story, characters, and incidents, by Mr. Poccoke, the author of Rob Roy, and many other pieces of celebrity. The play commences from that part of the novel, in which the Highland Chieftains attached to the Royal cause, assemble at the House of Angus Macauley, and there accept as a leader the Earl of Montrose; who in disguise, has accompanied Monteith and Major Dalgetty, for the purpose of ascertaining the disposition of the Clans. While thus assembled, Sir Duncan Campbell, a deputy for the Marquis of Argyl, the leader of the opposite party, arrives, and demands an explanation of this gathering of the Highland forces. Major Dalgetty is dispatched by Montrose, with a reply to Argyl, who seizes the messenger and commits him to a dungeon, in which is confined Ranald of the Mist: they are here visited by Argyl in disguise, who in endeavouring to gain to his party the Major, incautiously exposes his own rank. The knowledge of this Dalgetty avails himself of, and with his fellow prisoner, after securing their means of escape; bind the Marquis and leave his Castle. Ranald conducts his companion to his retreat and clan; when they are pursued by a party of Campbells, who are ultimately defeated. Dalgetty with his friend, reaches Montrose, who is introduced to the latter: an engagement takes place between the two forces, in which Argyl's are defeated, though in the engagement Ranald saves Sir Duncan Campbell, whose Castle he had some years previous destroyed, and with it all its inmates, save a babe, afterwards taken by Allan Macauley, who revenged a feud upon the children, but, by the interposition of Monteith, saved the infant: she is bred in her preserver's house as Annot Lyle though Ranald in his dying moments declares her relationship to Sir Duncan Campbell, and she is ultimately married to Monteith, whose life Allan Macauley in jealousy has attempted. We felt it our duty to give this brief outline, tho we do not doubt but that the generality of our readers would have forgiven our neglect of it. The new scenery is extremely beautiful. That in which the mist rises from the hills, Loch Fine, and Loch Lochy, are particularly worthy of approbation. Though we cannot minutely enter into criticism, it would be unjust not to name Mr. Liston's Dalgetty, which was admirable. If we find fault with the piece, it is with the first act, which is an uninteresting (though we admit necessary) development of characters before well known. The Scotch airs were given much effect to the glee of "Green grow the rushes, oh!" and the song of "niddy noddy" particularly: but the original music (if a want of originality in it will authorize that title) was not only indifferent, but extremely ill placed. The fight was admirably managed, and we must admire Messrs. Connor's, Duruset's, and Liston's horsemanship—"and is it come to this." Though some slight disapprobation manifested itself, the piece was well received. The Duke of York was in the house.

DRURY LANE.

After Adeline had exhausted almost the whole stock of sympathy in the house, a new Petit Comedy in one act was performed for the first time under the title of LOVE IN HUMBLE LIFE. It is a simple affair of foreign texture; but our space will not admit of giving the plot in minute detail. Roncevantz (Mr. COOPER) a veteran hussar, loves Christine (Miss S. BOOTH) and has unknown to her promoted her fortune, but the girl is in love with Carlitz (Mr. KNIGHT) and cannot consent to marry him. Carlitz, however, arrives accidentally at the little country inn kept by Christine. She thinks him indifferent towards her, and out of revenge promises to give her hand to Roncevantz in a month's time unless he should agree to cancel the agreement. In the mean time Christine finds herself mistaken as to Carlitz's affections---they prove their mutual love to each other.---Roncevantz is informed of it, and generously sacrifices his own fond hopes to join the hands of the lovers. The dialogue is to the purpose---the acting excellent, Mr. Cooper gave full effect to the character of the worthy old soldier; Mr. Knight was quite at home as the Country Post Boy---and Miss S. Booth, made a pretty little hostess; success, therefore, attended the piece.

The House was not full.

COVENT GARDEN.

Our anticipation of the success of Montrose was yesterday evening realized by the very numerous audience assembled to witness the play, and the tumultuous approbation bestowed upon it. The two commencing nights of a new piece are in general unprofitable: the first, from the Theatre being chiefly filled with the established free admissions, and orders, (if success is PARTICULARLY desired) the second, from an almost invariable custom of granting them: accountable for, upon no other supposition (of ours) than that Fame lags in her course, when charged with Theatrical missions, and the sterling part of the audience, as desirous of a satisfactory information respecting the solidity expected of their dramatic enjoyments, ere they barter one solid for another. Much as we condemn the vitiated policy which is gradually undermining all that in the Drama is legitimate, dignified, and worthy of the national amusement of a great intellectual people, our narrow limits, and premier duty to our readers, oblige us to suppress our fears and indignation at the principles which guide, and at present advert dispassionately, and only to the act now under contemplation. To give Montrose the title of an Opera, is indeed too dignified; though were we disposed to view the present system as one of premeditated injury to the stage, we should name this a most subtle stroke of Machivalian policy; for, not satisfied with banishing Comedy, Tragedy, and Opera, as characteristic amusements of the day, their titles are artfully blended with those of puerility, and, like the garb of justice on a knave, cloaks vice and folly, beneath truth and virtue. But our feelings bursting forth have caused us to err. For an entertainment, which is melodramatic, Montrose is highly amusing. The story of the original has been faithfully adhered to—the introduced Scotch airs are remarkably sweet, and sang with great effect, and though it may not come within the scope of the stage to realize many of the imaginary scenes in the novel, the meeting of the clans, &c.—such, only, have been selected, as with the aids of scenery, horses, &c. &c. a fair delineation of can be produced. The two chief serious characters—Allan Macauley and Ronald, were, we understand, offered to Mr. Macready's choice, he with a due, and proper consideration of his Dignity, (for which he merits our thanks) refused them.

In criticising the performances of those characters, we will not insult the gentlemen past alluded to, by making a comparison of the effects which in either he might have produced. Ronald of the Mist was very ably performed by Mr. Yates; who displayed in many parts considerable ability: and we point out the perfections, ere we allude to the defects. The speech in answer to Argyll's question of "What would he do for Liberty, &c." in which he tells him to restore his kindred to their native hills—to rear the huts where desolation holds her seat, to fan the flames of life once more within the mangled remnants of his children—and then he would exchange with him on equal terms. In the delivery of these replies he displayed considerable feeling and energy, as well as in many other parts; but the defects (which are too apparent in Mr. Yates' acting) are the ill judged efforts at making points, and the servility of imitation.

Mr. ABBOTT did not in his delineation of Allan Macauley, create that settled, deep, romantic interest, which should accompany that character: 'twas a performance unequal; are in which Mr. A. in many parts outshone himself, but too often loosened his hold upon our feelings by relapsing into himself. Liston's Belgetty, was rich, humourous, and chaste: to particularize those parts which were particularly striking, would be to exceed our limits. By not overstepping the bounds of the character, and seeking effects by adventitious aids, he produced more powerful ones, for they were insullied by pity and regret. Mr. DURSET sang and acted with great feeling and propriety. This gentleman's and Mr. TAYLOR's verses in "Green grow the rushes," were most effectively executed. Mr. T. was extremely happy as the Scotchman, in both dialect, manner, and appearance. Miss STEPHENS received and merited much applause. The piece has undergone some few alterations since the first night; a glee and duet in the third act have been omitted. Argyll's cowardly retreat is now supposed; and Allan was not last night so very vehement, in his entreaties to Monteith to permit himself to be run through the body; the two latter exciting with much justice the risible faculties of the audience. The applause at the conclusion of the engagement was tumultuous. By the bye one of the combatants introduced a sweeping brush.

COVENT GARDEN.

This Theatre was on Saturday evening most indifferently attended. The pit, though good, was not filled: and the dress, and upper circles of boxes, as well as the galleries, were very poorly so. We trust that we express no ill sentiment towards this establishment, when we assert, that we should not repine at the above-named circumstances, if we thought they arose from the regeneration of pure taste, or the satiated appetite of the existing one. But these are causes, we fear of hopes creation, by all those who estimate the value of that profession which gave birth to the brightest rays of literature and genius. Much censure will be bestowed upon the sordid and narrow minded policy of of managers, which aims at the accumulation of profit, regardless of the means by which they are acquired, or of the respectability or real interest of the drama or the stage: yet that hydra-headed monster, the public, is not unmeriting of a share of this, for if, as facts appear to authorize, it be asserted that the stream of national taste has changed its course, and from Parnassus o'er the barren bed of ignorance and folly holds its way—it becomes the few who yet retain the judgment to discriminate between the amusements which become the understanding, and those which gratify the fancy, to rouse from their supineness, and dam up the polluted waters which now run in an unworthy course, and turn their freshness where drooping cultivation may be revived, and verdant beauty once more spring around. Mr. Lisson was on Saturday so extremely hoarse as to be obliged to leave out all the music introduced in the character of Dalgetty. The play went off with great success, and was announced for to-night amidst great applause. Husbands and Wives was the afterpiece on Saturday, and the applause in one of the scenes in the last act, was really tumultuous. It is a bustling, light, and agreeable Farce: though not overstocked with morality or decency. By the bye, Mr. EMERY should not let the furor of acting get the better of his self-possession.

To the Editor of The Theatrical Observer.

SIR,

As it must be a part of your daily occupation to read, and endeavour to understand Play-bills, perhaps you may be kind enough to assist me and the public in general, in discovering the meaning of the correct and grammatical Bill of Drury Lane for this day (Friday) in which it is stated that "LOVE IN HUMBLE LIFE—was honored by the unanimous approval of the whole Audience"—and, moreover, that it was "announced for repetition with that genuine favour which will give it a place amongst the established Dramas of this Theatre"—not that the announcement was received with favour. Now I should wish to be informed whether "unanimous" and "the whole" are not synonymous terms---and whether "being announced with genuine favour, does not mean on the part of the person making that announcement!

DRURY LANE.

On Saturday evening the attendance at this house was very far short of that which its well-wishers could desire. The cause of this desertion is certainly to be attributed in some degree to the production of new pieces of no high merit; and which have not these attractions of scenery and spectacle that have proved so beneficial to Covent Garden establishment; but another cause may be found in the economy which now guides most families, and prevents their visiting the theatres very frequently. An attempt should be made to produce a new Comedy of sterling merit---there are admirable performers here to give full effect to a Drama of this description.

DRURY LANE.

PIZARRO was last night performed to a better Pit and Gallery, than Box house. Yet in the latter part, if there were not a numerous company, it was elegant, and the front row of the three center Boxes contained some beautiful young ladies whose loveliness gave a charm to that portion of the Theatre, which drew every eye that could command the view from the dreary blanks in the other parts. MR. KEAN was Rolla; and never, nay remembering a KEMBLE, was represented the hero, never was the character more forcibly and admirably exhibited. We confess that, not having before seen MR. KEAN as the Peruvian chief, we were impressed (from acquaintance with his usual style of acting) with the supposition that he could not give the part all the effect required. But we were most agreeably disappointed, as he threw into it so much of nature, elevated, yet simple, that we followed him from scene to scene with delight. MR. KEMBLE certainly acted Rolla in a powerful manner; yet in our opinion he did not touch the heart so closely as MR. KEAN, but won us rather by the dignity than the unaffectedness of his virtue. MR. KEAN has a power which MR. KEMBLE did not possess; he is more a master of the pathetic, and can give tones of inexpressible tenderness to his voice, although when over-stretched it is often hoarse and disagreeable. MR. KEMBLE commanded applause—MR. KEAN engages our feelings to bestow it. His appeal to the sentinel was beautiful; and by its effects proved the truth and force it was marked by—"Oh! holy nature! thou dost never plead in vain!"—His entreaty to Alonzo to escape, had all the requisite earnestness, and the tone in which he reproves them for doubting the propriety of his advice.—“Did Rolla ever counsel dishonour to his friend?”—was mild, yet dignified. The determination of manner in which he detains Elvira, and the tone in which, braving her dagger as he holds her, he exclaims “Strike it to my heart—still with the convulsive grasp of death I’ll hold thee fast,” were excellent and made the generous undaunted friend fully conspicuous. The tent scene was ably performed; but we think Rolla should not exclaim so loud at the ear of the sleeping Pizarro, when the impulse to stab, him is expressed—“He is at my mercy—and one blow!”—The manner in which he stands over the prostrate Spaniards and restrains his calling to the guards was much applauded, as was the speech which he concludes with throwing away the dagger. His next forcible piece of acting is where he vainly remonstrates with Pizarro, in behalf of Cora’s child. Three rounds of applause and cries of bravo marked his excellence in this scene, which was only equalled in action by the manner in which he staggered in with the infant, casting it to its mother and dropping dead before her. Miss EDMISTON acted Elvira with considerable ability: but it was not such a performance as we had hoped for: she seems occasionally rather timid in the use of her powers—Mrs. SIDBONS has been called a pantomimic actress—we wish Miss Edmiston would study a little more of that species of pantomime. She wants the art of bye-play, of silent, speaking, gesture, that tells as much, and as distinctly as the tongue can utter.

Mr. COOPER as Alonzo was very effective: Mr. THOMPSON, we are sorry again to notice, but the parts he is so often thrust into, he is quite unfit for: the consequence is, that he did not meet the favour of the audience as Pizarro. Mrs. WEST is a very sweet Cora. The Play on the whole went off with eclat.

In our yesterday’s Drury Lane Play Bill, Giovanni in London was announced as the afterpiece for that evening instead of Adeline. We can only say, we printed from the Bill of the Theatre; but the Management is so vacillating that the public is often deceived. To prove that the error was not ours, we have placed the Drury Lane Play-bill of yesterday, in the window of our Office, for the inspection of those who might doubt the fact.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Tuesday night this Theatre was better attended than it was on the two or three previous ones. The Pit before the hour of half-price, was full, and the Box circles, as well as Galleries, were at the same period of the evening (though not filled) very numerously attended. On the performance of Montrose we have nothing new to remark; as it is a style of entertainment on which a superficial exercise of criticism, is not only sufficient, but which exposes—upon minuter and repeated investigations—a tissue of absurdities well enough calculated to divert for a limited time the imaginations of the elder, and rouse the mind, interest, and feelings, of the younger branches of society. In short, it is an imposition upon our understanding through the medium of our senses: and if historical instruction and amusement are insisted upon as effects derived from it, we recommend to all grown babies, Mrs Primer's Abridgement of the History of Scotland with painted cuts, and the Romance of “Blood will have Blood; or the Mysterious Bandit.” It is an inconsistency scarcely to be believed, that so many hundreds of respectable people, whose time is valuable, should nightly waste it on such trash, while their libraries are vacant, and their fire-sides left dreary, should employ four hours in attentively listening to that, for the recital of which they would chide their elder boys, and suffer such gross absurdities to creep upon their hearts, which might otherwise be diluted, by the earth-tasting bliss of heavenly happiness—the domestic circle. The Private Boxes too are nightly filled by votaries of fashion, pride, and intellectual greatness! By those whose education, rank, and station, should lead the fashion to noble purposes: yet who, like their imitators, dive in the polluted stream of folly and imbecility. Shame on the public!—shame!

The musical Farce of The Libertine concluded the entertainments of Tuesday evening. Miss Tree as Berlina was greeted with that warmth, which should be bestowed on public and private character. Mr. Duruset acted and sang the music in the part of Mazetto with much humour and effect. As an actor this gentleman possesses much talent; and as a singer, he has requisites which, by due attention, would place him far above mediocrity. Mr. Meadows has much improved in the character of Leporello, and produced very great effect in some parts of it.

DRURY LANE.

Town and Country, and Adeline, did not draw to this House, on Tuesday evening, an audience calculated to benefit the establishment. the Comedy is, taken altogether, a very insipid piece—the Melo-drama, somewhat too doleful. In the former, Mr. KEAN played Reuben Glenroy, a character that may certainly assist that gentleman in variegating his performances, but is little calculated in itself to be an agreeable adjunct to the livelier delineations in a work of the Comic Muse. It may be called fine, but it is out of place, and, therefore untunes the harmony of good humour that should exist throughout a genuine Comedy. Mr. Kean acted the part with his usual force, and obtained considerable applause. The Cotton-spinner was humourously played by Mr. MUNDEN, but we think we have seen him in better spirits. It is no wonder that a damp should be cast on the exertions of the performers, when, (as Paddy said) they see so many absent friends. Mr. KNIGHT, however, has the knack of keeping his merriment up, in spite of empty benches: we verily believe, this gentleman would act in his best style even to his own shadow; it is scarcely possible for him to avoid the hit direct, as he jumps into his part and cannot get out of it. The other characters were respectably filled---although we could have wished that Mr. BARNARD, as Captain Glenroy, had not looked so like a drill-serjeant. But there's a homely saying too applicable to that gentleman---what is bred in the bone won't out of the flesh. We have no ill-will to Mr. B. who is a very sensible assiduous performer, but we have often wished that he had not a whole bone in his body. His inflexible movements give one a pain in the back to behold.

Mr. Mathews has been performing at the Pantheon in Edinbrough, with very great success.

DRURY LANE.

From recent observations on the manner in which the Boxes at this Theatre, have been attended, it would appear that the fashionable world consider it vulgar to be seen at the representation of Shakespeare's Tragedies, and that the "immortal bard" is nothing without the aid of Mr. Bishop's musical compositions and selections. Thus, on Thursday evening, altho' the Pit and Galleries were comfortably filled, the dress Boxes were not half occupied, and the other Boxes nearly empty. Yet Richard the Second was the Play, and Mr. KEAN represented the unfortunate monarch. At Covent Garden Theatre the reader will perceive there was on the same night a numerous assemblage to witness the melodramatic, operatic stuff, garbled from the scotch novellist's Legend of Montrose. This is the display of public taste—the proof that there exists amongst the higher orders a desire to patronise the British Drama!

Mr. Kean's performance of Richard the 2nd. contains many beauties. The character itself is that of a man easily influenced, by representations of prosperity, to give way to arrogance: or by misfortune to yield with tame submission, yet with princely feelings, and bitter recollections of his former weaknesses. He raises pity, but cannot command respect. Mr Kean gave to these qualities of the deposed sovereign the truest colours. His fiery impatient demand to know why his adherents had not joined him, and then his chop-fallen tones on learning their being put to death by Bolinbroke, were excellently delivered. But the part where he had most opportunity to produce a forcible impression was in the scene where he surrenders his crown to his successful opponent. The soliloquy with the mirror was most admirable, and great applause followed.

Mr. COOPER acted Bolinbroke well, and was frequently applauded; but it is to be regretted that his delivery is so defective: at the end of almost every line of blank verse, Mr. Cooper raises with an unpleasant tone the pitch of his voice, and at once destroys the natural effect of the speech. If he were to practice with a judicious friend at his elbow, to make him conscious of this inharmonious habit, he might break it down.

Mrs. WEST made the Queen as full of grief as the part required: she exerted herself almost too much.

This Play we do not think so well calculated as most of the other Tragedies of Shakespeare to please on the stage; for it is very deficient of incident: it, therefore, should not be again produced.

DRURY LANE.

It might be supposed that the Manager of a drooping Theatre amongst the means he could resort to in order to retrieve his affairs, would particularly apply himself to the liberal encouragement of dramatic talent---it might be conceived it would strike him, that to obtain a new Drama of sterling merit, and attach thereto whatever of the labours of eminent artists and composers should seem desirable, and then to put the whole into the hands of his best performers, would be the way to ensure success of a permanent nature. Yet, strange to say, the Manager of Drury Lane Theatre patronise: dulness if it comes cheap, and is satisfied with the possibility of a temporary favorable effect, produced through the medium of scene-painters, composers, and excellent comic and vocal performers. An instance of this extraordinary policy was afforded at this House on Saturday evening, when a New Comic Opera, under the title of The Veteran; or, the Farmer's Sons, was produced for the first time. To give a detail of the Plot of this most miserable Drama, would be as difficult as the endeavour to discover a spark of wit, or genuine humour in the dialogue. However, we are enabled to say, that the Veteran is a General Van, (personated by Mr. MUNDEN) who has two pretty daughters, Rose, (Miss FORDE) and Bell, (Madame VESTRIS)---that The Farmer is one old Franklin, (Mr. POWELL) and his two Sons are Captain George, (Mr. HARLEY) and Jonas. (Mr. KNIGHT). We also can state, that the General has two hangers-on Sergeant O'Rory O'Whack, (Mr. FITZWILLIAM) and an old fellow, (whose designation we could not catch) represented by Mr. G. SMITH. To which characters there may be added a Recruiting Serjeant, (Mr. GARTIE) and a pretty, moping, cottage lass, named Patty, (Miss POVEY).

The Veteran General has double duty to perform, namely, to relieve the distresses of the village, and to bring his daughter Bell to a reasonable conception of the value of the tender passion of love, which she derides, although opposed by papa and sister. The farmer, poor man, is bed-ridden through vexation at the bad times, until the last scene: but his sons George and Jonas are active in his service. George has been missing from his family for many years, but has become a Captain, saved the life of one of the General's daughters, and returns to his native village just in time to sing and spout parliamentary speeches on the highway—to support the manoeuvres of the General to cause the heart of Miss Bell to capitulate to Cupid, and to restore the fallen fortunes of his own family. Jonas is employed in hugging bailiffs—in taking the King's bounty as a recruit, to preserve his feather—in finding a pocket book—reasoning on honesty—making love to Patty, and wiping his eyes because he is an honest lad and reverences his dad. Sergeant, or Major, or Sergeant-Major O'Whack, (he was sometimes called one or other) was a sort of an aisy, mollified, aid-de-camp to the General: and the old fellow was outler to the whole corps of paupers under the same command. Each, when they could, sang a song, a duet, or a trio, or joined in a row-de-dow chorus, and so the whole concluded amidst applause, with victory over Miss Bell's obdurate heart—joy for the found brother George, and the happy love of Jonas and Patty.

The music was in the whole very effective, the execution in general good. Miss PEARSON, who made her debut on this occasion, has a pleasing person, but her voice, although possessing great power and compass, seems wiry in the upper notes, and husky in the lower ones: but we will not be decisive in our opinion of her vocal talent until we hear her under circumstances less alarming to her nerves, which were occasionally much affected by the trial she was undergoing. She is a pupil of Mr. ROOKE, and was much applauded.

The House was by no means full.

COVENT GARDEN.

This House was most numerously and elegantly attended on Saturday evening to see Montrose, the Rendezvous, and the Comedy of The Padlock. These pieces were received with great applause. The absence of Mr. LISTON, (who from his continued hoarseness has been unable to sustain the character of Dalgetty for the last two nights) has thrown a great damp upon the Opera, but he appears this evening.

COVENT GARDEN.

FORTUNE seems constant and bounteous in her favors to this establishment. The Pit and Galleries were filled previous to the hour of half price admission last night; at which period of the evening, the Boxes were most respectably attended; nor did the private compartments lack fashionable guests, while all parts of the house presented busts on which Time, and (to appearance) Wisdom, had stamped their powers, yet who participated in the frivolous amusements of the hour with an avidity equal to that expressed by their children who occupied the row before us—"Parva lœva capiunt animos." Mr. LISTON having recovered from the hoarseness with which he had been afflicted, sustained last night the character of Dalgetty, and imparted to the play the greater portion of interest which it is capable of creating. The Opera is at best but a heavy entertainment, indebted for its lighter parts to Mr. LISTON's exertions, and to the fight—which is well arranged. In the prison scene Mr. YATES performed with much feeling and effect; but we must hint to this gentleman, that however the long acknowledged merits of certain performers, may induce the audience to tolerate in them occasional effervescence of spirit, Mr. YATES is too young an actor to assume similar license. The persons who visit a Theatre, do so, to be amused, not to be laughed at. We must notice the performances of Mr. CONNOR and Mr. EBERTON; two gentlemen, whose general exertions, soaring not beyond their proper sphere, merit the attention and support of the theatrical public. There is a little part—a Scotchman, admirably performed by—we believe, Mr. KING. We hear it rumoured that a change in the management of this Theatre is on the tapis.

---

DRURY LANE.

The repetition of The Veteran, last night, did not attract a numerous audience. The abundant flattery offered in this piece to Britons

---the eternal, sickening, common-place sentiment---truisms---absurdities---stage-tricks; and other clap-traps, scattered through it, are nauseous to every one who chuses to ask himself---are these the fair means to gain applause? are these the resources of an author, who feels he has GENIUS to rely on for success? But then, some exclaim ---“ Oh, it is only an OPERA, we must not be rigid as to the plot or dialogue of a mere vehicle for music.” Really!---worthy critics! ---Well, if you care not whether good sense is allied to harmony, a coal-waggon and four horses loaded with a band of music in a procession, would be as fit an entertainment for you as the vehicle at Drury: and the honest, swaggering, bluff, waggoner, with his fat horses, and the noisy musicians, blowing and scraping Rule Britannia, amidst the uproarious applause, and tumultuous progress of the surrounding mob, would equally gratify your national prejudices, and flatter you into the belief of being one of the immaculate Britons. Such Operas as The Duenna, for instance (which the stupid author presumed to write with more attempts to satisfy the judgment and taste than the self-love of his countrymen) should now be consigned to the care of the Spiders in the Prompter's closet, whilst The Veteran keeps the field with all the vigour of a Courtier.

The songs told very well last night, and Miss FORDE received considerable app'ause: but we are sorry to confirm our first opinion of the qualities of her voice. Her middle tones are good, but the higher and lower ones far from harmonious; she does not manage her voice well, and in “Hark! hark! the echo” frequently failed to satisfy the ear. A contest ensued on the call for an encore---She was, however permitted to repeat it. In our opinion this lady's musical talents, are greatly inferior to those of Miss POVEY, who sang delightfully.

DRURY LANE.

IN the Play-bill of this Theatre for the present evening, we find the following notice :

" The new Comic Opera, entitled The Veteran ; or, the Farmer's Sons, experienced the same brilliant success throughout its third representation on Tuesday evening ; the encores were as numerous as on the first night, and it was announced for repetition with unanimous plaudits. It will therefore be performed every Acting Night until further notice, this Evening and Monday next excepted, those nights being appropriated to Mr. KEAN'S performance."

Now, is not this too much ?---We do not mean on the part of the Manager. for after having found that audiences can be got who are indifferent to, or unconscious of what materials constitute a drama of talent, and that they can be drummed, and trumpeted, and chaunted, and sentimentalized, and flattered, and coaxed, into unanimous plaudits, he is not to blame for continuing, like a cunning apothecary, to doze his patients with a palatable drug, as long as possible ; but what shall we say of the silly people who swallow the trash ! ---who gulp down boluses enough to make a horse sick, but which are so nicely sugared over with "British bravery," "British justice," &c. that they make no wry faces ?---who placidly permit innumerable applications to the heart compounded of the stale honey of farm-house virtue, and the usual proportion of Hibernian mollifications indifferently strained by Mr. Fitzwilliam ? Why, surely, we must say they are in the worst state possible, and require the best advice. We, therefore, recommend their staying at home, and taking a draught of Sheridan or Shakespeare, or any other enlivening and strengthening mixture of wit, humour, and sound sense. This would soon, with due care and perseverance, work a cure ; for their taste and judgment would be somewhat improved, and they would then feel inclined to " throw physic to the dogs."

Miss FORDE is announced to be preparing for the part of Polly in the Beggar's Opera.—Captain Macheath, Madame VESTRIS, Peacochum, Mr. MUNDEN, Filch, Mr. KNIGHT, Lucy, Miss COPELAND, and, we presume, Locket, Mr. LOVEDAY. We must confess that we are somewhat surprised that in the present state of this concern, reliance should be placed on Miss Forde's powers, which, at least, require much cultivation.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE attendance at this Theatre on Tuesday evening, and the apparent enjoyment of the audience, were confirmations of the increasing popularity of the Opera of Montrose. As the present success of this drama is likely to prolong its existence for some time, we trust that the Managers will unite with it in the entertainment of the evening, such afterpieces as are consonant with good taste;—by doing which, the dulness created by the Play, may be much relieved, and the frequenters of the Theatre (whose opinions do not entirely coincide with those of the multitude) will have no reason to blame the conductors of this establishment for a decided exclusion from all rational enjoyment within its walls. The musical talents of the company are strong; and there are many afterpieces—translations and originals, in which they might be displayed to infinite advantage. We make not these observations in hostile reference to the farces at present performed, as we admit that they are selected with some discernment; but, with the view to warn the managers against the substitution of melodramas and spectacles, that may affect the success of a play on which the arrangements of the season depend; and, if the additional attraction of novelty is requisite, let them refer to their file of Bills of five and twenty years ago, which may furnish them with revivals well deserving of their pains.

The Opera of Montrose is about to be produced in the Bath Theatre, which has been lately very successful from the attraction of the play of Kenilworth.

Mr. YOUNG, we understand, is shortly to perform in Dublin.

We have received "Impartiality's" letter, but do not see the force of his observations.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Thursday evening this Theatre was extremely well attended: the Boxes were nearly full, and the Pit and Galleries were comfortably so, previous to the half price hour. The Opera excited its usual meed of applause. We were amused by the animal on which Dalgetty rode: Sir Duncan Campbell's first pistol having missed fire, the horse at which it was aimed, stretched himself upon the stage, as dead, 'ere the second shot was discharged. This created much merriment in the house. The finale to the play (or rather Liston's verse in it) was very warmly applauded, and when Mr. Duruset came forward to announce the performance for this evening, the audience loudly demanded an encore of the concluding music. The verse which created this is as follows, and the effect given to it by Mr. Liston was irresistible:—

TUNE.—“ Fy lets a' to the Bridal,”

Sir Dugald Dalgetty, Drumthwacket,
A knight, and a bachelor too:—
A bon camarado to back it,
Presents himself, ladies to you:
A husband—whenever war ceases,
I'll be, to some fortunate fair;
But unless you could split me in pieces,
You can't all come in for a share.

So I'll away, &c.

Morton's Farce of a Roland for an Oliver followed the Opera, and was performed with considerable spirit. It is a very laughable bustling piece, though the plot is inconsistent, the incidents improbable, and the characters over drawn. EMERY'S Fixture is a performance too well known to need an observation. The other characters were sustained with effect. Sheridan's Entertainment of the Critick is announced for to-night; and we expect to derive much gratification from witnessing its performance. We have not yet seen the bills of the day, but presuming that Mr. W. Farren plays Sir Fretful, we anticipate considerable delight. We have seen that gentleman in the character, and do not hesitate to pronounce his delineation of it, an admirable piece of acting.

DRURY LANE.

PIZARRO, which was acted on Thursday night to a numerous, but not "overflowing" audience, is a Play, well calculated to gratify the taste of the present times. It has a portion of the Melo-dramatic style, with something of the genuine tragic; the incidents are striking and romantic, and the plot interesting, particularly as it arises in some degree from the recorded barbarities of the Spaniards in Peru, and gives a picture of their ferocity in the character of Pizarro, and of the supposed bold, but peaceable disposition of the unfortunate natives in that of Rolla.

The Spanish leader was personated by Mr. THOMPSON, whom we would feel gratified in recommending to the favorable notice of future audiences when this play is performed, did he not himself restrain us. Rolla, as personated by Mr. KEAN, we know does not please every one—but we are not of the number. Taking from this gentleman's acting some few peculiarities, which seem too deeply ingrafted in his nature to be got rid of, we consider him a great performer; in short the most powerful delineator of the passions we now have on the stage. In Rolla, therefore, who is continually under the influence of strong emotions, there is ample room for the display of Mr. Kean's genius, and he does not neglect the opportunities it so often affords to make an impression. Whether as the lover, the friend, or the hero, he is seldom far from nature: his manner of delivering the child, and expiring at Cora's feet, is a fine exhibition of the art, and terminates his whole efforts with eclat. Mr. COOPER was not without his proper share of applause as Alonzo.

Mrs. SIDMONS has left her Elvira too strongly rooted in our memory for the part to have in any other hands, a high effect. Yet Miss EDMISTON, who again acted the heroine on Thursday evening, has much merit. She does not, however, sufficiently mark her emotions by silent gesture. It was by the look of proud contempt—of empassioned bitterness—by attitudes of commanding boldness—and pauses full of obvious meaning, that Mrs. Siddons made Elvira an object of the deepest interest. The gentle Cora is a character well suited to Mrs. WEST.

COVENT GARDEN.

MONTROSE and THE CRITICK brought a numerous audience to this Theatre on Saturday Evening. In respect to the first piece we, really, have nothing new to say; we contrive to keep awake until the battle scene, when our faculties are thoroughly roused by the din of war; and a few pinches of snuff are afterwards our resort from the subsequent nap-inspiring scenes.

The Critick is a very heavy piece to those who do not understand or relish satire. Many around us were yawning and looking stupid: and once or twice we heard "den'd stuff" repeated. However, the greater part of the audience seemed amused particularly with Mr. W. FARREN's intimitable representation of the ridiculed author Sir Fretful Plagiary. His performance was received with loud applause. We have only one thing to object in him; that is, the broad exclamation of "Good God!" On the stage this should be softened as much as possible, for it must otherwise offend many who do not approve of such expletives. Mr. JONES is a good Puff; but Mr. EGERTON was completely out of his element as Sneer; his voice is not of the proper pitch for such parts—it has a touch of melancholy that blunts the efforts of humour or satire. The other characters were sustained very satisfactorily.

DRURY LANE.

On Saturday night there was a very thin House, to witness The Veteran; or, the Farmer's Sons, and Adeline. Many parts of the dialogue, the music, and the acting of the former, received considerable applause. Yet these were evidently in some instances rather the result of a partial coincidence of feeling, than of that judgment which is decisive of merit. Mr. MUNDEN ripens as the veteran general, and supports with all his heart and soul the silly campaign against Miss Isabella. Mr. KNIGHT as Jonas has made himself quite at home: and Mr. HARLEY as Captain George, seems completely farce-inspired. Mr. FITZWILLIAM is more pat in O'Whack. Mr. GEORGE SMITH is as deep an old fellow as a base part could require; and the ladies, MADAME VESTRIS, MISS POVEY, and MISS FORDE, sang as divinely as they can.

In poor moping Adeline; Miss COPELAND continues to draw forth many a pocket-handkerchief.

CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received the letter signed "A Daily Reader of The Theatrical Observer," objecting to our last remarks on The Veteran, or The Farmer's Sons. His "astonishment" at our language cannot be greater than ours at the numerous clap-traps in the piece, that catch some portion of the audience and make them flap their wings, whilst their more sensible neighbours sit silently smiling at their folly. Too many observe that the plot and dialogue merely, and in a somewhat clumsy manner, tie together the songs, a few of which are pleasing, and which, with most admirable acting, carry on the whole without any expressed disapprobation, apparently obliterating in the minds of many of the audience all ideas of dramatic criticism. We are informed that we have given great offence to the author, Mr. KNIGHT, of Drury Lane Theatre: but that we cannot help: we flatter no man under any circumstances. Acquainted as we are with Mr. Knight's excellent private character, and impressed with a high opinion of him as a comedian, we have ever felt pleasure in recognising his merits; but there exists no reason why we should praise him, as an Author, for relying for success rather on the good feeling than on the good sense and just taste of an audience: amongst instances of which we may mention the address of Mr. MUNDEN at the close of the Opera, which is an unworthy manœuvre, whereby the applause apparently sought for the character, is drawn forth by a connection with the just popularity of the performer, and becomes merged in the presumed general approbation of the piece!

Let our friend, "A Daily Reader," (whom we presumptuously guess at) the next time the Veteran is performed, go, or if he cannot, let him send a deputy to observe the audience, and note the number that do not applaud, and yet do not hiss; and, then, (making due allowance for the effect of the manœuvre) he will have an idea of how many "like" and how many "dislike" the entire Opera.

COVENT GARDEN.

Before the hour of half price admission, this Theatre was not so well attended. as it was on many of the previous evenings on which Montrose was acted. The Pit was comfortably filled, the Dress Circle moderately—the upper tier of Boxes very indifferently, and the Galleries were about half filled. The piece went off with its usual eclat : much applause was bestowed upon the Overture, a number of Scotch airs, hastily, and most indifferently jumbled together. By the bye, we cannot avoid noticing a very absurd custom, connected with chorusses, and dramatic music, which is highly inconsistent, and entirely destroys that great effect which otherwise they would be capable of producing. The Play commences with a chorus of the Children of the Mist, expressive of much anxiety, fear and impatience, created by the delay of their Chief, who is absent with his sons and a party of his clan : yet those persons whose duty it is to express this, are, with a stiff formality, ranged across the stage examining the state of the house, and leaving the rest to the discernment of the audience. It is a great pity that this is not attended to. We were much pleased with Mr. Taylor's verse in "Green grow the rushes." We shall go to the Theatre to-night with some degree of curiosity to see Mr. Macready's Daran.

---

DRURY LANE.

The Fashionable World seem to have abandoned poor Drury, and to have left the patronage of SHAKESPEARE'S best tragedies and of Mr. KEAN, to the less brilliant, but not much less intelligent, portion of society who frequent an humbler part of the house than the Dress Boxes. Last night these once graced receptacles of elegance and beauty, were dimly lighted up with a few scattered sparklers, that, like stars in a cloudy night, made, as they struck the eye, the surrounding gloom but the more obvious. There were not above a hundred and fifty persons in the whole of the Boxes, whilst the Pit and Galleries were crowded to an overflow !

It is deplorable to see those whose education, habits, fortune, and rank, should make them leaders of taste, thus slight the Drama on occasions when it is worthy of their support, and flock to frivolous reprepresentations and amusements where neither the mind nor the heart can be improved. The announcement of the performance of the famous Tragedy of Richard III. for last night, appears not to have attracted the attention of a dozen families in this vast metropolis! But there was Montrose at the other house; and, then, there was the honourable Mrs. HOPE's Rout, Mrs. JEFFRIES's Quadrille Ball, Lady WILLIAM BENTINCK's Rout, and Viscountess HAMPDEN's Rout, &c. all given last night, and they must be attended in preference to the entertainment of that hum-drum fellow WILL, SHAKESPEARE. Shame on the Great! who, although they may plead their having seen all Shakspeare's plays acted over and over, should nevertheless be eager to conduct their younger branches, who are not so intimate with the mighty master of the drama as they are, to imbibe his lessons on the passions, the weaknesses, and the embellishments of human nature, rather than usher them into giddy circles of splendour, where little, if any thing, is to be obtained that can add to true happiness.

We really feel indignant at the neglect of this establishment on evenings that it merits the highest support; and if our efforts could reach every quarter of the Court, we would call on the most elevated to distribute the sunshine of their illustrious countenances a little more equally between the two national Theatres, where a Garrick, a Siddons, a Kemble, and a Kean, have in Tragedy raised the character of the British Stage, and where Comedy has had the most distinguished assistants in the same cause.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE last night visited this Theatre, with some degree of curiosity to witness Mr. MACREADY'S performance of the character of Daran in the Opéra of The EXILE. This part though very dramatic and effective, is not of that description which exercises the higher powers of its personifier's abilities, nor claims the exertion of the superior intellectual faculties; to give it a correct delineation it is, throughout, a mere exercise of the commonest passions, heightened and rendered impressive by circumstances and situations. The character is beneath the talents of Mr. Macready, as well as of its former possessor, Mr. Young: but as originality of style is, and should be, the aim of superior talent—recollecting that, which was before displayed in this part—curiosity (as we before observed) was not a little heightened by the announced performance of yesterday evening. Mr. Macready evidently endeavoured to avoid aught that might approach to imitation; but, though many passages which were before rendered unimpressive, were last night given great effect to, yet the wish which was evident of giving to the part originality of delineation, might have deprived us of a gratification equal to that which Mr. Young created. The first scene produced GREAT effect, though at the expense, we think, of propriety: Mr. Macready expressed his assumed hatred for Ulrick in a manner which must have deprived the audience of the recollection of its being assumed. Daran loves Ulrick as his wished-for parent; and though he wears the mask of enmity to conceal his regard, considerably less energy (though we grant it would be less effective) must have deceived the Governor, and would have been more natural. There was a want of delicacy, softness, and refinement, in the affection of the gentle Romanoff, which breathes through the less gentle Daran: but the address to the Villagers who impede Alexina, was extremely natural and forcible. We were happy, at all events, at this gentleman's being called from the retirement in which the absurdity of public taste had thrown him, to exercise a portion of the brilliant talents he possesses. The Pit and Galleries were full: the Boxes were poorly attended.

DRURY LANE.

Something must speedily be done by the manager of this theatre to attract the public, or it must deeply suffer. There are at present but four acting nights in the week, and yet adequate audiences are not obtained, even when Mr. KEAN performs! Mr. ELLISTON cannot be charged with want of activity, although perhaps some deficiency of good taste and accurate judgment, may be laid to his charge, in the course he has pursued. There may, however, exist some extenuating circumstances for defects of the latter nature. Authors of eminence have long averted their attention from dramatic writing calculated for the stage—they have seen the puerilities that gratify the public, and the danger and degradation of contending with these in the cause of the genuine drama. Probably, therefore, it is not possible to induce them to trust their genius before an ignorant and tasteless tribunal; and thus the manager, however desirous to maintain the character of the British Stage, may find he can only rely for novelty on the exertions of inferior minds, or the revival of such old pieces as are calculated to amuse the light and thoughtless. If this is the case—if Mr. Elliston has done every thing in his power to tempt men of talent to write for his theatre, then no blame can attach to him. And if he is yet desirous by liberality and prompt politeness to induce such persons to write for his stage, we will willingly join with him in the call for them to come forward: nay, we would forerun the manager in his exertions for that purpose, and at once address ourselves who are conscious of possessing extraordinary powers, and would feel delighted in attempting dramatic writing. Such persons are earnestly requested to hasten to DRURY LANE THEATRE with their works, and afford the manager the happy opportunity of redeeming his character for judgment, taste, &c. &c.

TO PERSONS OF SUPERIOR TALENTS,

N. B. Should the love of Fame outstrip the partiality for Pudding, the more agreeable.

TO THE SUBSCRIBERS.

Our announced proposal to give all the Bills of the Play for the Minor Theatres must be abandoned, the Stamp Office having signified that such a compilation would be subject to Advertisement Duty, which would be too heavy an expense for the work to bear. " CAIN."

As this Dramatic Mystery has occasioned much discussion, and as we have no Theatrical representations at Covent Garden or Drury Lane to report, we insert the following Letter on the subject just received from the Noble Author by his Publisher.

LETTER FROM LORD BYRON TO MR. MURRAY.

" Pisa, Feb. 8, 1822.

" Dear Sir.—Attacks upon me were to be expected; but I perceive one upon you in the papers, which I confess that I did not expect. How, or in what manner, you can be considered responsible for what I publish, I am at a loss to conceive. If "Cain" be "blasphemous," Paradise Lost is blasphemous; and the words of the Oxford gentleman, "Evil, be thou my good," are from that very poem, from the mouth of Satan; and is there any thing more in that of Lucifer in the Mystery? Cain is nothing more than a drama, not a piece of argument. If Lucifer and Cain speak as the first murderer and the first rebel may be supposed to speak, surely all the rest of the personages talk also according to their characters; and the stronger passions have ever been permitted to the drama. I have even avoided introducing the Deity, as in Scripture, (though Milton does, and not very wisely either); but having adopted his angel, as sent to Cain, instead, on purpose to avoid shocking any feelings on the subject, by falling short of, what all uninspired men must fall short in, viz. giving an adequate notion of the effect of the presence of Jehovah. The old Mysteries introduced him liberally enough, and all this is avoided in the new one.

"The attempt to bully you, because they think it will not succeed with me, seems to me as atrocious an attempt as ever disgraced the times. What! when Gibbon's, Hume's, Priestley's, and Drummond's publishers have been allowed to rest in peace for seventy years, are you to be singled out for a work of fiction, not of history or argument? There must be something at the bottom of this---some private enemy of your own: it is otherwise incredible.

"I can only say, "Me—me adsum qui feci," that any proceedings directed against you, I beg may be transferred to me, who am willing, and ought to endure them all; that if you have lost money by the publication, I will refund any, or all, of the copyright; that I desire you will say, that both you and Mr. Gifford remonstrated against the publication, as also Mr. Hobhouse; that I alone occasioned it, and I alone am the person who either legally or otherwise should bear the burden. If they prosecute, I will come to England; that is, if by meeting it in my own person, I can save yours. Let me know---you sha'nt suffer for me, if I can help it. Make any use of this letter which you please. Your's ever,

COVENTGARDEN.

THE Oratorio was last night numerously and elegantly attended.—The Mount of Olives was given by Mrs. Salmon, Miss Goodall, Mr. Pyne, and Mr. Nelson, with great effect. The selection from ROSINI'S Oratorio of Moses in Egypt also gave the highest delight. In the Miscellaneous Act, Madame Ronzi substituted an Air (which was encored) for that which Madame Vestris was to have sung, who was prevented by a severe cold from attending. The whole was received with great applause.

DRURY LANE.

PIZARRO is to be performed to-night, and we trust a crowded audience will grace the occasion. It is one of the most effective plays acted, as the feelings are continually interested, and the mind gratified by the sentiment and story. We regret that Mr. THOMPSON should be put into the part of Pizarro—it is out of his line entirely, as, indeed, is every character we have seen him in at this Theatre, with the exception of one, namely King Corney in that renowned compilation of defunct nonsense, entitled Giovanni in Ireland.

It is not altogether fair towards Miss Edmiston to put her in contact with such a Pizarro.

MR. MATTHEWS.

This facetious gentleman is about to resume his entertaining labours at the Lyceum, and has made known to the world that it is his intention to give a Full, true, and particular Account of his BIRTH, PARENTAGE, and EDUCATION, LIFE, CHARACTER, and BEHAVIOUR!

There are few characters who have gone through such variety of scene, and consequently who have had such opportunities of knowing the world, as Mr. Matthews. We will not anticipate him in the detail of a single incident of his odd history, for our sources of information, we have no doubt, would, in many respects, be found very defective. Of this, however, we are able to inform our readers—that his "Day and Night Scenes" will prove full of humour and singular events; that many lessons on prudence, patience, and propriety, may be gathered—and that anecdotes and imitations of many dead and living sock and buskin friends and acquaintances will be given.

We need hardly wish Mr. Matthews success, for it is sure to attend him. We shall take the liberty of visiting him AT HOME, and promise to give our friends, at least, an outline of his history.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN's Rolla, although not commanding an overflowing house, was not utterly neglected, last night, by the public. It is on the whole a powerful piece of acting, and was attended with those decisive marks of approbation that cannot but follow merit. Miss EDMISTON improves as Elvira—still she is not all we could wish; but nature is in fault, not her judgment. Her person is not sufficiently commanding to give the adequate impression of a bold and enthusiastic woman. Mr. COOPER, we think, has gained lately on good opinion. He is indefatigable—and industry with a certain portion of talent, must have its beneficial effect. As Alonzo, he displayed much true feeling, and fairly earned the favour of the audience, aided as he was by so interesting a Cora as Mrs. WEST makes.

---

COVENT GARDEN.

MONTROSE and The LIBERTINE, were the performances last night, but did not draw a very full house.

Captain Dalgetty is certainly one of the chef d'œuvres of Mr. LISTON. He enters so fully, so naturally, and humourously into the character that we cannot but think he is actually the dry bold comarado he represents. There is a careless, fearless, good nature, about this celebrated Captain, that distinguishes him from all Captains we ever had the honor to be acquainted with in print or on parade. But, it appears, in one thing he resembles certain Officers mentioned by a certain gentleman in a certain place, on Wednesday night, namely, that amidst all his campaigning he has a particular respect for the quantity and quality of the materiel for his own proper corps, or as Naval Officers call it—belly-timber,

Miss M. TREE as Zerlinda in the after-piece, sung sweetly and looked delightfully.

Theatre Royal, Covent Garden.

Under the Management of Mr. BOCHSA.

This present Friday, March 8, 1822.

PART I.

A Selection

Recit. and Air, Mrs. Salmon—With verdure clad. (Creation)

After which, in consequence of the great applause on Friday last, will be performed for the third time, a New (MS) Sacred Oratorio, entitled

THE DELUGE.

Written by C. Dibdin. Composed by Mr. Bochsa

The subject commences at that period of time when the Almighty has determined to destroy the World on account of those corruptions with which, from the wickedness of man it is filled.

Introduction.—Expressing the beauty and sweetness of a morning before the Flood.

Recit. (Attendant spirit) Mr. Sapio ---Contrasting the bounty of Providence with the ingratitude of mankind, and eulogising the piety of Noah and his children.

Chorus, (Noah and his family)---Prayer and thanksgiving.

Recit. and Air, (Noah) Mr. Bellamy.---Fatal stillness that fore-ran the Flood ; blind confidence of men ; and Patriarchal adoration of the deity.

Recit. and Air, (Angel), Mrs. Salmon.---Promised safety of the inhabitants of the Ark.

Recit. (Attendant spirit) Mr. Sapio.---Rebellion of man's evil heart, and the vengeance of Heaven.

Chorus.---Frantic Orgies of the Wicked.

Symphony.---Appalling horrors of the rising Flood, and desolation of the Wicked.

Chorus.---Fearful Darkness, torrents of Rain, rushing down of Rivers. war of the Elements, extreme misery of Men, Giants of the Earth scaling the Mountains, Tempest increases, Despair of the World, universal Wretchedness.

Semi-Chorus, (Angels).—Denouncing the Vengeance of the Lord.

Recit. Mr. Tinney—Describing the peril and distress of a surviving Family in their resort to the mountains.

Duet, Miss Stephens and Mr. Sapio.—The agony of the Husband and Wife, with their Infant, surrounded by the Waters.

Chorus and Fugue. Despair of Mortals.

Between the First and Second Parts, a Pot-Pourri on the Violin by Mr. MORI.

PART II.

Introduction ---Awful state of the World when the Waters subside. Dawning of hope and mercy.

Recit. and Air, (Angel) Mrs. Salmon.—Renovation of Nature and celestial commiseration.

Mr. WATSON, will also be numerous: and assisted by the Young Gentlemen of His Majesty's Chapel Royal, St. Paul's Cathedral, and Westminster Abbey.

MISS WILSON.

AMONG all the distressing events in the south of Ireland, the inhabitants of Cork can turn their attention towards theatrical amusement. We find in a paper of that city the following remarks on Miss Wilson, who rendered such happy services to the Drury Lane Establishment last year.

“It is rare, indeed, to meet with one so highly and so variously gifted: perhaps there is not on the stage a performer who unites at the same time such excellence as a singer and an actress, and very few who can be compared to her in either character. Her fine person, animated, expressive, and delightfully happy and contented countenance, and the cheeriness of youth which plays about her, make at first sight an impression in her favour, which is powerfully confirmed by a style of speaking at once insinuating and elegant, and by action and movements full of grace, ease, and dignity.”

Another Cork Paper says—“Miss Wilson fully realized every expectation which the loud voice of Fame had created. Her performances reach the heart through the eye as well as the ear.”

It appears this pleasing young lady made her debut in Cork as Rosetta, and gave such delight, that the Opera of Love in a Village was to be repeated. She was to visit Limerick.

The Exile is getting up in Dublin in grand style for Mr. Yoxse's appearance as Idem.

DRURY LANE.

THIS Evening The Beggars' Opera is to be performed, and the chief novelties are Miss FORDE in the part of Polly, and Miss COPELAND as Lucy, Madame VESTRIS is Macheath, for which she is as unfit as Mr. THOMPSON is to perform the gentle Desdemona. We do not say she cannot sing some of the songs tolerably well, but we do say she renders the part a perfect burlesque from her very feminine figure, and boyish voice.

Who that recollects Inchelon can bear to hear Madame Vestris, or to see her courting and kissing girls, and commending tall sturdy thieves? As Giovanni she may pass for a gay youth; but a Captain of Robbers requires to be personated by some one of more muscle, and a more manly voice than this lady possesses. Miss BLAKE who acted Macheath last year at the Haymarket Theatre, would, with a little addition of vivacity, be a more impressive representative of the character than Madame Vestris. The former young lady has a peculiarly fine voice for the part, and looks it better than the latter, as she is considerably stouter in her figure. The Beggars' Opera could be, with her assistance as Macheath, excellently got up at Covent Garden, with Miss STEPHENS or Miss TREE as Polly; Miss HALLANDE as Lucy; Mr. FAWCETT or Mr. BLANCHARD as Peachum; and Mr. EMERY as Lockit; Mrs. DAVENPORT as Mrs. Peachum; and Mr. MEADOWS as Filch.

We should like to see a little rivalry between the two Theatres on something like even ground. A neck-and-neck contention for the favor of the public, rouses the play-loving part of it, and has often very beneficial effects for Managers.

There is, however, no possibility of doing much for either house without a leading male singer, which neither of them possess at present.

We are very eager to see the long-promised appearance of Mr. KEAN as Sir Pertinax Macsycophant. The public expectation is considerably raised, and much further delay cannot be necessary.

The two Silver Cups voted, as a mark of respect, to Mr. KEAN, by the Inhabitants of New York, have passed through the Custom-house, duty free, and were forwarded to Mr. Kean on Wednesday night.

Mr. ELLISTON is expected in town from Paris on Monday.

DRURY LANE.

SOME of the scenes of GAY'S Beggars' Opera, compressed into two Acts, were represented here on Saturday night. Considering the dramatic non-effectiveness of a female Macheath, it is just as well to give up all idea of using the Opera for any other purpose than as a vehicle for music, or the display of an attractive lady in breeches. Miss FORDE was much applauded as Polly, and was encored in "Virgins are like the fair flower," and "Cease your funning." She has rather raised her vocal reputation by this effort, but still, requires much instruction.

MADAME VESTRIS as Macheath, met her usual distinction from the audience. Miss COPELAND acted Lucy for the first time, but there is so much of the part cut out, nothing worth mentioning is left. She is a clever actress, although we cannot compliment her on the capability of her voice for an angry song. Mr. MUNDEN as Peachum, it may be supposed, was the prop of the comic portion of the piece that escaped the manager's scissors. Mrs. HARLOWE supported him excellently as his wife—we beg her pardon---as Mrs. Peachum. We did not much like Mr. KNIGHT's Filch; nor Mr. GATTIE'S Lockit---how differently did DOWTON play the quarrel-scene, which on this occasion entirely failed.

After the Opera, Love in Humble Life was played with excellent effect. And in Amorosa, which concluded the evening's amusements, Mr. HARLEY, as the King of Little Britain, kept the house in continual merriment, in which he was well assisted by Mr. KNIGHT as Cooky, Mrs. BLAND as Her Majesty, whose sweetly executed song was encored, and Mrs. ORGER is the bewitching Mollydusta.

The House was wretchedly attended.

COVENT GARDEN.

MONTROSE, and No Song no Supper, brought a numerous audience here on Saturday evening. Every part of the House was well attended, except the Galleries. Miss TREE was a delightful Margaretta in the Farce.

MR. MATHEWS'S YOUTHFUL DAYS.

WHOEVER would wish to laugh---whoever would wish to be brought in contact with many celebrated men of the present and former days---whoever would wish to know how it is possible for one individual to be the sole entertainer of a thousand for nearly four hours---let him go and pay a visit to Mr. MATHEWS at the Lyceum. We will ensure him from falling a sleep, from ennui, and from the Blue Devils. The astonishing exertion which produces a rapidly-interesting, never-flagging amusement for such a length of time, must be supposed to be great---it is so---and we only wonder the animal spirits, and other physical powers of Mr. Mathews can support it: but although it must exhaust him greatly, he contrives, by his collectedness and powerful display of vivacity, to appear almost as fresh and vigorous at the conclusion as at the commencement.

The present Entertainment, in our opinion, exceeds any of his former ones, in variety, interest, and humour: for on this occasion facts, and real portraitures predominate in the amusing, but genuine history of one who has obtained well-merited popularity. Yet fiction is not altogether neglected in the episodic and concluding parts. At an early hour the Lyceum Theatre, or The English Opera House, as it is now styled, was crammed full with genteel company, and impatience sat on every countenance: for as the doors were opened at seven, and the performance did not begin until eight, an hour of How d'ye do's---and Who's that's, was rather tiresome. At length the appearance of Mr. E. KNIGHT at the piano-forte gave goodly tokens of the coming hero---who, when he appeared, was received with tumultuous applause.

We are happy to say that he looked in good health and spirits, and if he had not been so, we must certainly have had to record his final exit before he had got half through his arduous task. Mr. Mathews divided his amusement into THREE PARTS. The First comprises the period from his Birth to his arrival in Dublin, to make his appearance at the Theatre under DALY'S management. The Second includes his stay in Dublin, his departure for Wales, his removal from thence to Yorkshire to act under the management of the singular TATE WILKINSON, and his arrival in the Metropolis, and debut at Covent Garden Theatre, at which point he very properly concludes the narrative of his Youthful Days. The Third Part is a Petite Farce, under the title of STORIES, in which some of the characters mentioned in his narrative are introduced, and with some new ones form a dramatic personæ that exhibits the loves and difficulties of Mr. George Augustus Fipley, and Miss Amelrosa--with the blunders and humours of the lodgers in a watering-place Lodging-house.

It is not our intention at the late hour we are now writing, to attempt in this Number to give a correct outline of the Early Biography of Mr. Mathews, as delivered by himself, but we propose in our next Number to commence the detail, and to be as accurate as possible. Let it not, however, be supposed that we can give any idea of the features--the voice--the manner---nay, nor the language of Mr. Mathews. If we can present the current of his story, it is as much as can well flow from any pen.

We would recommend to Mr. Mathews to shorten some of the dialogue, as the whole is rather too long: and, we think, the song of Crooskeen Lawn might be advantageously omitted, as the majority of his audience will not be composed of real Irishmen.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS House was excellently attended last night, to witness Mr. MACREADY'S second appearance as Duran in The Exile. He gave high satisfaction, and was honored with frequent bursts of applause. His appeal to the Empress is a most admirable example of forcible elocution.

Blue Beard in all the "original splendour" followed; but where were Mrs. CROUCH---KELLY---STETT, &c. &c. ! Alas ! alas !

DRURY LANE.

THERE was a better attendance here, last night, than we have seen of late. Mr. KEAN'S Richard the Third was no "sucking" performance. Nor, although the audience rattled for his gratification, there was no disposition for childs-play exhibited on his part.

Mr. MATHEWS's YOUTHFUL DAYS.

-It was our intention to commence in the present Number, an outline of the principal incidents of the Youthful Days of Mr. Mathews, as narrated by him on last Monday evening; but on re-consideration we defer doing so until we have again refreshed our memory, and correctly heard several names that amidst the din of applause escaped our hearing. We, therefore, beg to announce that on Friday next we shall begin the detail of Mr. Mathews's most entertaining history, and finish it most probably in the Six succeeding Numbers.

COVENT GARDEN.

Montrose, and The Miller and His Men, were performed, last night, to an overflowing Pit and Galleries, and very numerous and elegantly attended Boxes. There seems to be a superior charm about this House that is leading it fast to independence. We are happy at this success—but, we would have been better pleased if we could have recorded it as being derived in some degree from Dramas of purely intellectual merit. The Exile, an ill written piece, had a splendid Procession and Coronation tacked to it, and, therefore, nightly drew an immense concourse. The Two Gentlemen of Verona, by no means a good acting play, although Shakespeare's, had the fine Spectacle of the Carnival, and all the town ran to see it. Let but these two pieces be announced to be acted without the shews—What would be the consequence? Would the House overflow at an early hour? Would people, through rain and dirt, press forward in anxious haste, lest they should miss hearing Daran's declamatory speeches, or, Sir Proteus's and Sir Valentine's love breathings? No—no. Montrose, likewise, is a piece calculated only to satisfy the eye and the ear in any high degree. The sweetness of the Scotch Airs, and the beautiful Scenery carry it through triumphantly, with the powerful aid of Mr. LISTON's Captain Dalgetty, without whom, we think, neither scene nor music could scarcely keep it long on the Stage.

DRURY LANE.

It is a painful duty to record the neglect shewn by the public to this Theatre: but we cannot conceal the fact, for were we to follow the example often held forth in the Play-bills of stating what is not the case, we should gain no credit for our true statements.

It is bad policy in the Manager of a Theatre to misdlead the public for an instant, by puffing off what he is conscious cannot stand the test of just criticism. Many applauders are to be found in a Theatre actuated by partiality, ignorance, and other motives, whose decision is not ratified by the independent and sensible, and, therefore, a Manager should not rely on empty acclamations that do not extend the good fame of his proceedings beyond the walls of his house. He should judge for himself—and ask his own reason whether he, as one of the audience, would applaud the passing representation. If he cannot conscientiously say he would, he may be pretty certain the public at large will be of the same opinion. We regret that there have been so many instances at this Theatre of dependance on new Dramas and performers that cannot render substantial service to the Establishment. It has lost credit with the public on this account; and nothing but the exertions of Mr. KEAN has of late been serviceable. His forthcoming attempt of Sir Pertinax Macsycophant, announced for next Monday night, we trust will be productive. Yet Mr. ELLISTON must endeavour to obtain other means of attraction—a sterling new Comedy for instance, which would possibly arouse the fashionable world, and render the Boxes of Drury again the seats of beauty and splendour. But where is the author?

The Beggars' Opera, was repeated last night. Miss FORDE was encored in several of her songs, but the qualities of her voice, and her taste, are not of that description that comes home to the heart. By great cultivation she may become a much more pleasing singer;—but at present she cannot be expected to attract in any considerable degree. Some hearty laughs were drawn forth by the admirable acting of Mr. MUNDEN in Peachum. Madame VESTRIS, as Machbeth, sang “If the heart of a man,” in a very superior manner, but the silly audience made no effort at an encore. Love in Humble Life, and Amoroso followed. The House was half empty.

Mr. HARRIS, we understand, has been for some time in treaty to let Covent Garden Theatre. A correspondent states, that he has actually concluded a contract, with some highly respectable gentlemen, at an annual rent of £18,500 for a term of ten years. The management is to remain as at present, with the exception of Mr. HARRIS.

SIR PERTINAX MACSYCOPIANT.

WE have stated that Mr. KEAN is announced to appear as Sir Pertinax in Macklin's satirical Comedy of The MAN OF THE WORLD, on Monday evening. The manner in which he will execute the character is a matter of general curiosity, as it is one so very foreign to his usual line, and one that has failed in the hands of every person who has attempted it since its representation by the late Mr. GEORGE COOKE. Cooke was most admirably adapted for the part. His features had all the characteristic marks of a Scotchman, and his dialect was in perfect unison with them. But it was the air—the look—the tone—which he assumed, which made his representation so rich a treat. We have seen him at least ten times in this character, and with equal delight throughout. He never for a moment lost sight of his part, and, therefore, his audience was intensely fixed on it. The manner in which he narrated to his son Charles, the history of his rise in the world, was irresistably comic, and was only equalled by his delineation of disappointed ambition and rage, on the discovery of the failure of his plans.

Mr. MATHEWS, in his Entertainment at the Lyceum, gives a short specimen of Cooke's style in Sir Pertinax; and we can say it is a most admirable imitation. Those who intend to go and see Mr. Kean on Monday, may, therefore, by paying a visit to Mr. Mathews, be enabled to mark the difference of manner adopted by each, particularly if Mr. Mathews would favor them with a somewhat more extended example.

Mr. RODWELL, the Box-book Keeper of Drury Lane Theatre, takes his Benefit this evening, and we hope he will have a full House. We understand this gentleman feels a little hostile to our Paper, as the considerable sale it has at the Theatre, although advantageous to the Establishment, interferes with his interests as the Proprietor of the Drury Lane Play-Bills, for which he pays a Rent of £200 per Season to Mr. ELLISTON. We could say a great deal on this subject, but shall defer it until another occasion. In the meantime we repeat our good wishes for the success of Mr. Rodwell, who is a very worthy Box-Book Keeper.

DESCRIPTION OF MR. MATHEWS' NEW ENTERTAINMENT.

LYCEUM.

On the second representation, last night, Mr. MATHEWS had as many friends to visit him as his house could well hold, and was as successful in amusing them as on the first occasion. We now proceed to give a pretty full account of his Entertainment of this season, which he has divided into Three Parts, and denominates the Two First, THE YOUTHFUL DAYS OF MR. MATHEWS; and the Third, STORIES, which is, as we have stated, a little drama, wherein he alone represents all the characters.

Mr. M. begins with observing that he presumes there are many who have honored him with their company to whom an introduction is unnecessary, but as there are some strangers of course, he begs to present, "Mr. Mathews, Mr. Pit, ... Mr. Pit, Mr. Mathews."

After a short prefatory address of compliments to his friends, he commences his narrative. He tells us that he made his first appearance in this world on the 28th of June, 1776, about half-past four o'clock on a cloudy morning, at his Father's house, No. 18, in the Strand; whereby, (to prevent all troublesome calculation, as he observes) he was now turned forty five. Of the criticism past on this his debut, he could not tell much, but he has heard his nurse say, that he was a long, lanky, bony, noisy, restless, urchin, with features that could not be by any means called agreeable. His nursing time was past, he presumes, in the usual manner—imbibing nourishment for the elongation of his body, and doing those things which no infant leaves undone. Time at length qualified him for the use of the Primer, and afterwards to receive the instructions of a school-master in St. Martin's Lane, whom he names Mr. Wirebrush. Here he remained for some years, playing pranks, and yet profiting by Mr. Wirebrush's tuition; until he was removed to Merchant-Tailor's School, and came under the absolute government of Dr. Bishop, who was so profound a scholar that he reached the bottom of his subjects with a wonderful facility. At this eminent place of education, Master Mathews made due progress in the routine duties of the school; and underwent as a Fag, all the hardships of that customary service, until entitled himself to be a Master. He was grievously used by his little tyrant, who made him do the menial offices of wash-hand bason emptier, shoe-cleaner, &c. besides occasionally using him as a warming-pan to air his bed. He gives a ludicrous description of School-boy Oratory, and exhibits the awkwardness, timidity, and bashfulness of youth, on the trying occasion of delivering a Latin, Greek, and English Oration. The prompting by a boy supposed to be behind the Orator, is excellently done. The applause sometimes bestowed on the delivery of school speeches frequently raises in the youthful mind a strong desire for public speaking, and, consequently, the origin of Mr. Mathews's early predilection for acting may be traced to this source.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Two Gentlemen of Verona, Tom Thumb the Great, and The Sleep Walker, drew a very full house last night. Mr. YATES as Somno in the Farce, gave several imitations of performers---those of Mr. Munden, Mr. Blanchard, and Mr. Kean, were the best---those of Mr. Kemble, Mr. Young, and Mr. Liston, were, however, by no means ineffective. YATES is a clever performer.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Oratorio of The Messiah, last night, was brilliantly attended, and went off with grand effect.

The Management of this Theatre is now chiefly in the hands of Mr. C. Kemble, who begins his career with producing one of our best Comedies, The School for Scandal, in which he appears as Charles Surface, on Tuesday next. We hail this as a happy omen of the new Manager's regard for the legitimate Drama.

DESCRIPTION OF MR. MATHEWS' NEW ENTERTAINMENT,

His father was a considerable, and what is termed a serious Bookseller, residing in the Strand; and it may be imagined that he had more religious than dramatic works in his shop. Master Charles, whilst at home, was directed to peruse the former, but tracts were his aversion, and so he was intractable. The plays alone were his delight; and these he greedily read, until his imagination was worked up into a dramatic mania. He went to learn French of a Parisian Lady, a Madame Coterille, who resided in a large room over a Pastry-cook's shop, No. 421, in the Strand, and here he had Master ELLISTON, (now Mr. ELLISTON, of Drury Lane Theatre) as a fellow-pupil, who it appears was equally play-struck with Master Charles. These youths frequently took the liberty of indulging their passion for acting in the presence of Madame, who was at first quite enrage—"Why for you not attend your lesson?—You do spout—spout—spout about a ma chambre like a tea-pot—You do jumpe and jumpe, and shake, and break all ma crockerie in de closet—and de window tremble for fear de glass be broke with your arms that you toss about like de arms of de windmill." Madame, however, was good-natured enough to yield to the young buskins, and permitted them to get up plays in her apartment, on the aforesaid first floor, over the Pastry-cook's. Mr. Mathews' father of course, frowned on this partiality for the stage, and resolved, as the elder brother was to become a clergyman, to devote Charles to business. Much proposing and opposing took place between father and son on this subject, and at length the former being so intimately connected with Letters, referred to the Post Office Directory, for a choice of trades, which reference Mr. Mathews has put into the shape of a humorous song entitled "Trade chusing." At length it was determined that he should be a Bookseller, and as Mr. M. sen. was fond of good binding, he took Charles to Guildhall, and had him bound apprentice to himself, before the famous WILKES, who was then Chamberlain of London. Mr. Mathews takes the opportunity to give a portrait of this celebrated political character, and, at that time, worn-out debauchee; and judging from a well-executed print of Wilkes which we have seen, the resemblance is admirable; and, no doubt his voice and manner, were given with equal truth. DRURY LANE.

SUSANNA CENTLIVRE'S entertaining Comedy of The Busy Body, with Mr. MUNDEN as Sir Francis Gripe, and Mr. HARLEY as Marplot, could not bring the public to this house, on Saturday night, in sufficient number to fill one third of it! This is really astonishing and distressing.

Why this Theatre is thus often neglected on occasions that merit a full attendance, is difficult to be accounted for, unless we suppose that it has lost the confidence of the public, from the imbecility that has marked many of the novelties, and the vacillation which has rendered all its arrangements doubtful.

To-night, curiosity to see Mr. KEAN as Sir Pertinax Macsycophant, in MACKLIN'S Comedy of The Man of the World, will, of course, cause an overflow.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Saturday evening, Rob Roy Macgregor, and the Musical Entertainment of Rosina, drew an immense audience to this Theatre. Mr. MACREADY'S Rob Roy, we cannot consider as one of his best representations. He has too much polish about him; Rob has no small portion of coarseness mingled with his lofty notions of clannish independence---to the former Mr. Macready gives no adequate expression; however, he received much applause.

Miss M. TREE looked and sang delightfully as Rosina, the heroine of the Farce. Miss HALLANDE, from the deficiency of men singers, was obliged to represent William, and executed the songs with good effect. Miss FOOTE was Phoebe--she acts prettily, but really should not attempt to sing. Mr. DURSET did ample justice to the part of Belville. Mr. COXNOR made something more of the Irishman than we thought him qualified for.

THE ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.

THE performances on Saturday, were the Opera of Il Barone di Dolsheim—the Divertissement Villageois, and the Ballet of Les Pages du duc de Vendome; the whole went off with great applause from a brilliant assemblage, amongst whom we noticed, the Prince Esterhazy, and the Princess Feodor, daughter to the Duchess of Kent.

DRURY LANE.

WE are glad to say that a most brilliant audience, last night graced this Theatre. The Pit and Galleries overflowed a short time after the doors were opened; the Dress and First Circle Boxes were quite full, and the Boxes above nearly so. Mr. KEAN's first appearance as Sir Pertinax Macsycophant in MACKLIN's Comedy of The Man of the World, was the grand attraction of the evening, and he met throughout with most flattering marks of approbation. We must, however, confess that he did not come up to our conception of the character in all respects—he played it in a totally different style from that of the late Mr. COOKE, whose broad and rich humour created an effect beyond what any one has produced, since Macklin himself acted it. Mr. KEAN is, in our opinion, too restrained in his manner—too methodical in his delivery. The sycophancy of Sir Pertinax is made by him less apparent than it ought to be. Cooke's hearty laugh and look of ample approbation at every syllable uttered by Lord Lumbercourt, was the finest part of his representation—but Mr. Kean gives no adequate marking of the character in that way: he is more meditative than operative; and often seeks rather to strike by a silent and formal obsequiousness than by an over-eager shew of congeniality of feeling and acquiescence of opinion with the Lordly dupe. His two best scenes were that with Egerton, where he unfolds the way he raised his fortune, and that with Sidney where he seeks his assistance to destroy the character of Constantia. Yet in these he fell infinitely short of the colouring of Cooke. Mr. KEAN has two defects which make his representation of the character far less effective than what it ought to be. His features do not readily melt into a broad complacency, and his pronunciation of the Scots dialect, is very frequently erroneous. He has not the sough, as the Scotch call it: nor does he give the a broad or sharp on the proper occasions. His expression of rage at the disappointment arising from his son's marriage with Constantia, was very powerful, and on his final exit drew down great approbation. Some of the audience would not receive the announcement of the repetition of the Comedy for to-night from Mr. Cooper's lips, but called for Mr. Kean, who at length appeared, executed Mr. Cooper's duty, and withdrew amidst cheers. Lady Rodolpha was admirably supported by Miss S. BORN, and the loud applause she met with, rewarded her efforts. All the other characters were extremely well filled, particularly that of Betty Hint by Mrs. ORGER.

COVENT GARDEN.

There was a very good Pit and Gallery, but not so full a Box attendance here, last night. The Exile met with its usual success. Mr. MACREADY enacted Daran with his former vigour. Blue Beard followed, and delighted the Gods.

MR. MATHEWS' NEW ENTERTAINMENT,

He represents the old Chamberlain in his official Chair, fixing one eye on his father, and the other on himself, and haranguing him on the duties of an apprentice; in which he humorously includes those virtues that he most neglected throughout his long and eventful life; and, above all, advises him not to meddle with politics, for avoiding which, he says, he could give him at least forty five good reasons. Young Mathews, however, was but little inclined for the dull occupations of the Shop—he still paid his private devoirs to Melpomene, and at length he and a friend jointly subscribed fifteen guineas to procure a public appearance on the Richmond Stage. Previous to this he had taken lessons in fencing, and so great delight had he in practising, that the chief object in view in paying his seven guineas and a half, was to enact Richmond to his friend's Richard, in order that he might publicly display his skill in the use of the sword. But his friend had not an equal taste this way, and, therefore, wished to be run through the body without much trouble. Mathews, however, was resolved to have his money's-worth of fighting, and kept his opponent at it in spite of all his endeavours to appear slain, and entertained the audience with driving Richard about the Stage at the point of his sword, for twenty minutes by Richmond clock.

Mr. M. now became eager to obtain an opinion respecting his histrionic talents, on which he could rely. Accordingly he wrote to MACKLIN, who at that time was in his 103rd year, but with much vigour still remaining, and requested a hearing, which Macklin granted. Mr. Mathews here represents the manner and appearance of the veteran, and his own timidity on the occasion. At one moment he is Macklin bending under his century of years with all his faculties in good preservation except his memory; and the next he resumes his own character and gives a specimen of the florid style of acting, in Young Norval's opening speech. Mr. Mathews exhibits Macklin with the satirical leer that marked his opinion of his attempt, and which was confirmed by his interrupting the sing-song of the aspirant with a "Вон-вон-вон—Вон-вон-вон!" He then delivers the old actor's sentiments, on the qualifications of a Tragedian, who appears at length worked up into the enthusiasm of his art, and exemplifies the strength of his good self-opinion, by stating that Richard the Third was never properly acted but by two persons, one of whom was himself, and the other—here memory failed—the impression of his own superiority had withstood the obliterating hand of time, but that of another's excellence, being less deeply engraven, was effaced. MACKLIN'S Bow-bow, did not check the ardour of our young hero, who felt such a determined affection for the Stage, that he resolved to abandon all connection with the Stationer's Company for a Theatrical Company—and accordingly he quitted his father's house with some letters of recommendation, and twenty pounds in his pocket, for the purpose of joining the Dublin Corps. His father promised to send him another twenty pounds to bring him home the instant he should signify a desire to quit the Stage—this Mr. Mathews never claimed, and leaves it to those who have witnessed his success, to judge how far he has acted wisely.

COVENT GARDEN.

LAST night, was a night of distinction for this Theatre. Forgetting, for a moment, the power of Spectacle and Music, it relied on the genuine Drama for attraction, and selected The School for Scandal, the happiest effort of Sheridan's muse, for the occasion, and supported it by some of its best comic performers. The result was a crowded and brilliant audience, who were delighted with a most admirable display of talent in every part of the performance. On beholding such an effect from such means, it would seem that nothing is wanting to recall the public to the support our Theatres on principles of good taste, but a reliance on the Manager's presenting what is capable of satisfying such a taste. If confidence is lost in the judgment of a Manager, nothing but the positive gratification of the eye and the ear will lead people to the Theatre; and a habit of neglecting such an Establishment, arising from frequent disappointment, may for an instant sometimes produce an apparent indifference to its best and really worthy exertions. We trust we may safely congratulate the public on the new arrangement at this House, which constitutes Mr. CHARLES KEMBLE, chief Manager; we would not throw a glance of discredit on the taste and good sense of Mr. HARRIS; but like a Minister, who, from the difficulties of his times, conceives he is compelled to resort to somewhat unconstitutional measures, so Mr. Harris, we are convinced, deemed the, at one time, distracted affairs of his Theatre, a sufficient apology for agreeing to the representation of a succession of gaudy novelties, which his advisers thought were the sure means of immediate profit, although productive of permanent disrepute to the character of a Stage that ought to be limited to the higher walks of the Drama.

A change of circumstances has now arisen; and Mr. KEMBLE comes forward free to use those means of making a National Theatre worthy of the great country it is formed to adorn. We are convinced, that if it is ever generally understood that the future attention of both our Patent Theatres were to be devoted exclusively to the legitimate Drama, the public of all classes would rejoice at the change; and that the discussion of intellectual merit in a play would become, as in the good old times, a more fashionable and delightful matter of conversation, than the modern frivolous remarks and encomiums on the splendour of a procession. The Theatres would then become the resort of all who had pretensions to polite intercourse, and would be praised and rewarded whilst it fostered genius. The acting, last night, in the above mentioned humorous, witty, and satirical Comedy, was, throughout, the finest we have witnessed for a long time.

Mr. W. FARREN has long been celebrated for his performance of Sir Peter Teazle. In figure, feature, and voice, he has ample qualifications for the part; but it is his excellent understanding of the author's idea of the character that distinguishes him in it. Sir Peter, although fool enough, old bachelor at he was, to marry a young inexperienced country girl, still has, with a warm temper...a good understanding, a gentlemanly, and generous feeling. These qualities Mr. Farren places in the most proper and strong point of view.

Mr. CHARLES KEMBLE as Charles Surface, made his first appearance this season, and was greeted from every Box, the Pit, and the Galleries, with that hearty expression of welcome which is the just recognition of his public and private claims on the respect and admiration of every one. He appeared in excellent health and spirits, and advanced with the celerity of warm and gentlemanly feeling to make his bow. There are few but who are acquainted with his easy and elegant representation of Charles; and, therefore, we can only say, that last night he even exceeded himself.

Mrs. DAVISON, the too long unseen Mrs. DAVISON, assumed on this occasion, her old and celebrated character of Lady Teazle, which she never played in better style, and for which she never had stronger tributes of applause.

Mr. MACREADY as Joseph, Mr. FAWCETT as Sir Oliver, Mr. MEADOWS as Crabtree, for the first time, and Mr. YATES as Moses; were very happy in their representations; particularly the latter, who made the audience laugh heartily in the course of his money-lending instructions to Sir Oliver, by a little alteration of the text-- "Moses---And then he himself has not the monies by him, but is forced to sell five per Cents at a great loss!"

Miss FOOTE was an interesting Maria, and Mrs. GIBBS a truly scandalous Mrs. Candour.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN repeated the character of Sir Pertinax Macsycophant, last night, to a numerous and elegant audience; but the gallery company was very thin. We retain our former opinion of the whole of Mr. KEAN's representation of the wily Scot, although he certainly has improved a little on his first attempt. Perhaps, no person at present on the Stage could play the character so well as Mr. KEAN; yet, that is no reason why we should commend his essaying it. The fact is, that his physical qualities deny him the power of excelling in it, or approaching near the admirable representation by COOKE, with whose performance of Sir Pertinax, we profess ourselves intimately acquainted, as we seldom missed an opportunity of witnessing his appearance in the character on the London Stage. Yet, we say to the public. Go and see Mr. KEAN...you will, very probably, never again see The Man of the World so well performed.

MR. MATHEWS' NEW ENTERTAINMENT,

On his journey he had a fellow traveller whom he introduces to our notice as Mr. Ap Ilewellen Ap Iwyd—a Welch gentleman who had been born fat, grew up fat, and wished to be thinner. For which wish he had the strong propellant of Love, as Miss Winifred, the maid he adored, had rather an objection to add herself unto him, considering that Mr. Ilewellen was one out of whom two could very properly be made, instead of requiring any assistance to make two into one. The poor gentleman, therefore, had resolved like Don Quixotte, to sally forth in quest of what might recommend him to his peerless Dulcinea; but, so far unlike the Don, that he did not desire to wage war against any flesh and blood except his own. Mineral waters, and hot baths were his weapons, which he sought in all quarters, in the fond hope of their levelling the mountain that obstructed his way to bliss. All in vain—yet hope kept him on the search, and he even fattened on the prospect of an untried Spa, whilst he asked every friend and acquaintance—"Pray, think you not I am thinner?"

In company with this great man, Mathews approached Stratford upon Avon, the place of Shakespeare's birth and entombment. Here, as he beheld the fane of the Poet's mausoleum, for the church of Stratford is the depository of his remains, he felt all that enthusiastic glow of reverence natural to a young and well constructed mind: and he delivers, in eloquent terms, a short, but just encomium on the departed pupil of nature, and master of the passions. He obtained one of the thousand last bits of the famous mulberry tree planted by Shakespeare's hand, wrote his "nothing of a name" over the tomb of him whose name is immortal, and departed from the place to continue his route to Ireland. However, as it was Market Day at Stratford, he was inspired by the tuneful cackling of the geese, the squeaking of pigs, &c. &c. to burst into song—hence a rhapsody of odd imitation, musical and verbal, serves to fill up the moments required by packing the luggage, and putting to the horses, when off set our hero for famed Dublin City. On landing at the pigeon-house, at an unseasonable hour to get conveyance to the City, he met with the first specimen of Irish humour in a fellow, who, eager to accommodate the travellers, unexpectedly made his appearance with a Car, and crying "Whisht!" to them at every step. "What do ye mean?" said Mr. Mathews—"Whisht!" cried Pat—the question was repeated—"Whisht!" again, said Pat. "Arrah, don't speak so loud your honour, for there's a secret in the matter"—"A secret?"—Yes, your honour, whisht! a word in your air—I've just stole the car now sure."

DRURY LANE THEATRICAL FUND.

The Anniversary Dinner of this excellent Establishment, took place yesterday, with great eclat, at the Freemason's tavern. The Duke of York was in the Chair, and the sum collected amounted to £1300, including 100 guineas from the King. Miss POPE, formerly of Drury Lane Theatre, has bequeathed to the Fund, £500. Mrs. BLAND, Miss POVEY, Miss CURITT, &c. gave some songs from the Gallery in delightful style.

MR. MATHEWS' NEW ENTERTAINMENT,

Young Mathews did not like to trust his valuable portmanteau to Mister Whisht, so he accepted the services of a broad-shouldered arch-looking dog, who handled it like a snuff-box. Arrived at the Hibernian Hotel, the porter put the question about remuneration into new terms—"Pray, Sir, your honor, if my mudder should ax me how much above a tirteen you're to give me, what shall I say?" The manner in which Mr. Mathews relates these and other instances of Irish naivete, is truly amusing.

Our hero was now engaged at the Crow Street Theatre, under DALY'S management; and thus became, (as the actors were then comically nicknamed) one of Daly's Divarthers. Before he left London he had received a letter of recommendation to a Mr. Smith in Dublin, from DICKY SUETT, as Mr. M. calls that defunct personage, who was once a very entertaining comedian of Drury Lane. Suett, on learning young Mathew's intention of visiting Ireland, proffered this letter to Lollypop Smith, as he denominated him: and why he thus called the said gentleman he explained in a very humorous account of a little scrape he himself got into. "Me and my son Dicky, (said Suett) were fetching a walk—passing a pastry cook's, Dicky cast a longing eye on the cakes—we went in—he eat and I eat—I should like a lolly-pop, cries Dicky—take one my dear—he did—well, what's to pay?—dipped my hand in my pocket—no money! Oh la! ha! ha!—what's to be done Ma'am, got no money! you must trust me—'We never gives no trust, Sir,' cried the tart lady—Oh dear! ha! ha! oh la! don't you know me! I am Dicky Suett—'We can't give no credit, Sir.' Oh! ha! ha! very well, then my hearty let's sit down till somebody comes by that knows us. Ha! ha! oh la! Here's a situation—old Dicky and young Dicky Suett in pawn in a tart shop for a shilling! ha! ha! oh dear!—Just then Smith passed—Hollo! cries I.—Smith!—here's me and Dicky in pawn for a shilling's worth of Lolly-pops I will you take us out! Smith paid the shilling, and got in exchange from me ever after the title of Lollypop Smith. Ha! ha! oh la!" Mr. Mathews tells this anecdote with infinite humor, imitating the manner, look, and voice of Suett to the very life.

The delivery of Suett's Letter to Mr. Lollypop Smith, was attended with a ludicrous circumstance. Mr. Mathews went to the street where it was directed to, and seeing the name of Smith on a door, knocked and was shewn in. Mr. Smith appeared an elderly person of great gravity and formality, in short he was one of the Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers. Mr. Mathews presented his letter—it was opened—read, and re-read with marks of astonishment—when Mr. Smith, turning with a frowning aspect to the deliverer, enquired if his name was Charles—Yes,"—said Mathews. "Is this meant as insult?" exclaimed the Quaker in a solemn and angry voice. "Insult, Sir!" echoed the astonished Mathews. "What is meant by this?" asked the reverend looking man. "Meant, Sir" again echoed the youth— "Is it not a recommendatory letter from your friend Mr. Suett, Sir?"—"My friend!—I know no such person—recommendatory!—see if it be so"—said the Quaker, as he handed the epistle to Mathews, who took it, and to his utter confusion read the following.

“ Dear Lolly-pop Smith,
 Charley loves good ale and wine,
 Charley loves good brandy;
 Charley loves a pretty girl,
 Sweet as Sugar-candy.

He nastily stammered out an apology for the evident mistake, and withdrew with tottering steps to find out the real Lolly-pop Smith, whom he discovered to be a different sort of being, and very hospitable and kind. [To be continued.]

COVENT GARDEN.

A VERY numerous and elegant audience attended this house, last night, to see Montrose, and the musical entertainment of Rosina... The former piece went off very well. In the latter, the beautiful music of SHIELD, sung by Miss M. TREE, Miss HALLANDE, &c. &c. delighted the audience in a very high degree. These young Ladies are a treasure to the theatre, and they could not have been more pleasingly employed than in executing Shield's tasteful compositions.

DRURY LANE.

THE Sir Pertinax of Mr. KEAN, and Lady Rodolpha of Miss S. BOOTH, are rendering The Man of the World highly attractive... It, therefore, will, no doubt, continue to be performed for some time. Last night, a genteel and numerous audience testified their approbation of the performance in a most pointed manner. The pleasing musical entertainment of Paul and Virginia followed, and gave much delight from the sweetness of the music, and the excellence of the acting in the principal parts.

Miss FORDE is preparing to appear as Mandane in Artaxerxes.

MR. MATHEWS' NEW ENTERTAINMENT.

He made his debut on the Dublin stage in the character of Lingo in the Agreeable Surprise for the benefit of Mrs. WELLS, the original Cowslip; and repeated the part with great success. The celebrated Miss FARRER (now the Countess of Derby) arrived about this time to perform for a few nights; and amongst her characters she played Maria in the Citizen. Mr. MATHEWS was cast for the part of Beaufort. It not being the custom in those days to appear on the stage in the common every-day attire, Mr. M. was anxious to obtain a coat suitable to the part, and the occasion of performing with so distinguished a Star. But alas! the theatrical wardrobe was in a miserable condition—there were not more three or four coats in any way adapted for Beaufort, but not one that would fit Mathews. However, he was obliged to select that which was the least unsuitable, although it did not reach in the sleeves an inch or two below the elbow—this appeared very awkward—what could be done?

At last it occurred to hide the uncovered arms with ruffles—but alas! there was but one ruffle to be found to grace the unlucky divarter. Well—what could he do now? No matter—he resolved to supply the defects of Daly's wardrobe by his own ingenuity, and actually played Beaufort with one arm ruffled—contriving to hide the other, "behind the scenes" namely in his bosom, occasionally changing the ruffle dexterously from one arm to the other. It is most laughable to see the manner in which Mr. Mathews gets over this difficulty in the course of Beaufort's address to Maria. [To be continued.]

COVENT GARDEN.

The ORATORIO, last night, was elegantly, and most numerously attended.

THE ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.

This Evening, Il Turco in Italia, with a Divertissement, and the Ballet of Nina.

Mr. HARRIS of Covent Garden Theatre, is gone to Dublin, and it is said has carried with him the Adelphi piece, called Tom and Jerry, which he intends to bring out at his Theatre there. We hardly think it will suit the taste of the Dublin people.

Mr. LISTON is gone to Bath, and we learn that he quits Covent Garden at the end of the present season, and joins the Haymarket Company. With the cause of this arrangement we are not fully acquainted; but we are sure the public will be greatly disappointed if they do not see him again on the Covent Garden boards next season.

DRURY LANE.

A FULL Pit, and numerous and elegantly attended Dress-boxes, on Saturday evening, honored The Man of the World, and Giovanni in London, with flattering smiles, and loud testimonies of approbation. Mr. KEAN, by becoming more practised in the Scotch pronunciation, delivers himself with greater correctness, and less embarrassment to his acting—there is a very evident general improvement in his performance of Sir Pertinax. We have heard that his attempting this character was rather against his own judgment, and that at the rehearsals he evinced little confidence of success. The acting of Miss S. BOORN, in Lady Rodolpha, is very excellent, although admitting of some few corrective touches in the pronunciation—a defect which is almost too slight to be mentioned. We also think that if she were, after Egerton's explanation, to mark her delivery and carriage with an obvious change to a less boisterous tone and bearing, it would have an effect more agreeable to the ideas of Scotch gentlemen, who are not inclined to admit Lady Rodolpha's Scotch education as really creative of vulgarity. We cannot omit again praising Mrs. ORGER's Betty Hint, and Mr. COOPER's correct and gentlemanly personation of Egerton. Mr. PENLEY represents Sidney very creditably.

PIZARRO to-night—those who have not seen Mr. Kean's Rolla, should not fail to go.

DRURY LANE.

THERE was a good Pit and Gallery house, last night, at the representation of Pizarro, and Paul and Virginia.

Mr. KEAN played Rolla with great effect, particularly in the Prison Scene, the Tent Scene, and the concluding parts of the character. The manner in which he influences the sentinel to permit him to see Alonzo—the earnestness and devotedness he displays in urging his friend to escape—his interview with Elvira, where he detains her, and then yields to her arguments for the destruction of Pizarro—his attitude and address when he has the Spauld, under his uplifted dagger, which he casts away, revenging with clemency the wrongs of his country—his astonishment at seeing Alonzo's child in Pizarro's power, and horror at the tyrant's threats of vengeance against his friend by the infant's sacrifice—the dignified humility with which he kneels to petition for the restoration of the child—the desperation of bearing it off—and the final rushing with it into Cora's presence, casting it into its mother's arms, at whose feet he stretches himself and dies—all—all these points were admirably represented, and drew on him the universal applause of the audience.

Miss S. BOOTH performed Cora for the first time, in the place of Mrs. W. WEST, who, we understand, is in that situation "that ladies wish to be who love their lords." Of Mrs. West's Cora we have always spoken with praise, for it was a most pleasing performance—full of gentleness, and correct feeling. Coming after that lady, Miss Booth is rather put to a severe test; and we will not flatter her by asserting her superiority, or even equality with her predecessor in the character. Miss Booth's excellence belongs chiefly to a line where vivacity can be displayed; although she is not defective in marking feelings of a grave nature; still, it is in a manner and a tone that does not come so home to our feelings as we could wish. There is one quality which this young lady possesses, that enables her to get through any character with much respectability, namely good sense—she always knows what she has to do, and does it as well as her natural powers will permit.—She was often applauded.

Mr. COOPER's energy and discrimination in Alonzo, was amply recognised by the audience—he becomes popular—but there are some of his finishing tones that greatly require improving.

Miss EDMISTON did not act Elvira with all the fire and point we could wish—She should study pantomime. Mrs. SIDDOXS in Elvira, raised a feeling of awe by her attitudes and expression of countenance, before she uttered a word, and when she spoke, it was not merely by her lips, but with her whole frame.

COVENT GARDEN.

LAST night, this Theatre had a very full Pit and Galleries, but the Boxes were very thinly attended, as Monday is considered not the most fashionable night for visiting the Theatre. The Tempest and The Pantomime were the pieces performed. Mr. MACREADY played Prospero with very powerful effect. The style of this gentleman's acting is very different from that of Mr. YOUNG, and, we must own in some parts we prefer the latter. Mr. Macready shines most in great and sudden transitions.—Mr. Young is most effective in parts of an energetic but even tenor, where the powers of his elocution can be displayed. It, therefore, follows that Mr. Macready does not equal Mr. Young, as Prospero: certainly, he has talent to render the part very impressive, but we are not so spell-bound by him as we could wish.

The Caliban of Mr. Emery is a master-piece in its way—he is the greatest monster we have ever beheld. The musical department was admirably executed.

DRURY LANE.

THE Opera of Artaxerxes, (much curtailed) was performed here, last night, to a very thin audience. There was considerable novelty in the cast of the piece—Miss FORDE as Mandane, Miss CURT as Arbaces; and Mr. T. COOKE as Artabanus, being first appearances in those characters. We are really at a loss to account for the neglect of the public towards this performance, which presented more novelty than there was at the other House, that overflowed in all parts. We are aware that Fame has not made herself very busy about Miss Forde, although her trumpet has been, and may be worse employed than in sending forth to the world the merits of this young lady: Indeed we are convinced that had the same means been resorted to; as were used previous to Miss WILSON'S first appearance, to interest the public in her behalf, we should on this occasion have had to record her eminent attraction, and to have congratulated the Manager on his good fortune in having secured her services. We did not, we confess, think Miss FORDE, on her first essay on these boards, calculated to do the Theatre much good, as her voice on that occasion was far from satisfying the ear at all times. We subsequently stated, however, that she executed the songs of Polly in The Beggars' Opera, in a superior manner, and had thereby raised herself in public opinion: as Mandane, we will readily admit her further establishment of vocal talent, but in all her singing it is evident she stands in need of much instruction:—still, she is heard with pleasure, and executes many difficult passages with considerable facility: a proof of which exists in her success in "The Soldier tir'd" that was loudly applauded and encored. In regard to her acting, we would mention, in order that it may be corrected, a habit of giving a motion with her left arm, and occasionally with her head, corresponding to the music, which has a very disagreeable effect, for it gives the idea of greater effort than is requisite. A firm, collected, but easy and graceful demeanour in a singer, assists the command of voice, and adds greatly to the pleasure of the auditor.

Miss CURT is a delightful Syren, and sang "Water parted from the Sea" in a very superior manner—but the audience did not prolong the applause sufficiently to induce her to repeat it, although meriting an encore beyond any song in the Opera.

Mr. T. COOKE's Artabanes, did him great credit—we liked him better than Mr. Horn, who played it last season.

Miss POVEY as Semira sang with her usual taste—And Madame VESTRIS, though last, not least in our good opinion, maintained her former high reputation as Artaxerxes—her song, “In infancy our hopes and fears” was encored.—Upon the whole, even considering the want of Braham, this Opera was worthy of a more brilliant support than it received on this occasion. If it should be repeated after the holidays, we trust to meet a fashionable and numerous assemblage, testifying that Drury can vie even in Opera, with its neighbour of Covent Garden. The Quartetto, introduced from the Opera of Kais, was most justly encored.

COVENT GARDEN.

A NUMEROUS and brilliant audience attended here, last night, to witness the final performance of Montrose. The cause of this piece and The Exile, being stopped in their career, is that “the auxiliary engagements” alias the horses, being required for Astley's Amphitheatre on Easter Monday, the manager conceives it impossible to represent them with any good effect without the assistance of those admirable performers. This at once proves the opinion entertained of the mass of the enlightened public, on whose taste and judgment depends the patronage of the Drama.

Since we cannot, after to-morrow, when the Exile is performed for the last time, have any neighing steeds on the Stage, no doubt, we shall be more frequently compelled to see Mr. Young, Mr. Kemble, Mr. Macready, and Mrs. Davison, &c. &c. in genuine Tragedy and Comedy. This will, certainly, prove a bore to many of the enlightened public, and there may be some danger of too much vacancy in the House.

THE ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.

THE Ballet of Cendrillon, presented for the first time, last night, met with very poor success, but much more than it merited. The nursery tale of Cinderella, is very indifferently conveyed, nor did the arrangement derive much advantage from the scenery and decorations. Mercandotti's acting in the principal character was very pleasing: The dancing of M. Albert, Madame Anatole, Barre, and Mademoiselle Varennes deservedly received much applause. The Music by M. Sor, had little to distinguish it.

The House was very full.

LORD BURGHESH is the author of the Oratorio of Bajazet, from which a Selection is given to-night at Covent Garden.

MR. MATHEWS' NEW ENTERTAINMENT,

Amongst the performers in the Dublin Company, there was an old man of the name of Hurst, whose day had gone by. His memory had become very treacherous, which brought him often into difficulties, not a little amusing. Upon one occasion The Rivals was to be acted, but the person who was to represent Sir Anthony Absolute, being suddenly taken ill, Daly the Manager, fixed on Hurst to fill the part: Hurst, however, objected to venture on it at such short notice—the Manager insisted—Hurst remonstrated—the Manager was inflexible, so the poor old gentleman was compelled to study Sir Anthony with time past and time present against his success. He came to the performance but very badly prepared; but in order to help him through, he begged of Mathews to prompt him. The latter, however, full of youthful frolic, was more inclined to prompt a laugh at the old Stager's expense, than to help his memory; accordingly he watched the opportunity for a piece of wicked waggery, and found it in the first scene of the second act, where Sir Anthony, boiling with rage, exclaims to his son—"Zounds, Sir, the Lady shall be as ugly as I choose; she shall have a hump on each shoulder; she shall be as crooked as the crescent; her eyes shall roll like the Bull in Cox's museum; she shall have a skin like a mummy, and the beard of a Jew; she shall be all this, Sirrah! yet I'll make you ogle her all day, and sit up all night to write sonnets on her beauty."

Hurst was quite lost when he came to this speech, and often turning his ear to the wag Mathews, who maliciously gave a word where it could produce effect delivered it in somewhat like the following manner.

"Zounds, Sir, she shall be as ugly as—as—as I—as—she shall have a hump Sir—(hump) a hump Sir—have a hump, Sir—Yes, Sir, she shall be crooked—she shall—have a hump, Sir, (her eyes) on her eyes—a hump on her eyes like a (crescent)—like a crescent—a hump on her eyes, like a crescent, Sir—yes—Sir—she—she shall have an eye like a (Bull) bull, like a bull, (Cox's) like Cox's bull—she shall be a—a like a bull—a hump on—Cox's bull—she shall have a beard like a—a—(mummy) like a mummy, like a—a (Jew's) like a Jew's mummy—her eye—she shall have an eye—a Jew's eye—yes, Sir, (ogle) to ogle, Sir—Jew's eye—to ogle—a—a mummy—a—a cock and a—(Bull) and a bull—she shall—be like a—bull—(all day) all day—(up all night—) and be up all night, Sir—she shall—shall—Psha!" (Exit stamping with rage.)

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Selection of Music performed here, last night, was attended by a numerous and very elegant audience. The music from Bajazet, the composition of Lord BURGHERSH, attracted particular attention, and drew great applause. Yet that it should do so in a very eminent degree, is more than its qualities merit. Taste and science were displayed, but the stamp of genius is wanting.

DRURY LANE.

AN elegant and very numerous audience attended, last night, at the representation of The Man of the World, and Giovanni in London.

Mr. KEAN's Sir Pertinax, and Miss S. BOOTH's Lady Rodolpha proved very entertaining, and they received a due proportion of applause.

It is understood that with the conclusion of the present season, on Saturday next, many engagements of Performers terminate, and we are told that there is considerable uncertainty as to how the Company is to be formed for the future: so much so, that we believe some of the principal members are at this moment ignorant whether their services are to be required or not; and in the event of a non-renewal of engagement, will, probably, join either the English Opera-House, or the Haymarket Theatre. If we might give an opinion on the subject to Mr. ELLISTON, we would say: form a powerful Comedy corps—add to your present list, Mr. Downton, if he is to be obtained—look out for a first rate lady, and also a first rate gentleman—court some Author of real talent to furnish you with a genuine Comedy in which morality should not annihilate wit:—Try the town with this, and if it will not, with the relief of Mr. KEAN's and Miss EDMISTON's tragedy, do you good, then revert to some old comic author, who when pruned, and pointed, to suit modern taste, may succeed from the very fashion of reverencing antiquity. If in such a piece a little music can be appropriately interspersed, the more likely will it be to take;—but do not attempt to push mere Opera too far with your present materials. If one or two excellent Tragedians could be obtained, it would be an immense advantage to the general effect of the serious Drama.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Exile, was acted for the last time this season, yesterday evening, and was almost as attractive as on any previous performance, for the House was crowded in every part except the second circle and slips. We bid it adieu without regret...notwithstanding that we lose the gay procession of mock ambassadors, prancing steeds, and the gothic splendours of the cathedral, with the dignity of Mrs. Faucit's Empress, the elocution of Mr. Young's Daran, and the pity-moving tones of Miss Foote.

We trust we shall soon have some novelty more worthy of our notice than the Exile, to dwell upon; which if run through half a season still, may bear to be reflected on with entire satisfaction. There is reason to believe, that Mr. C. KEMBLE's ideas of what is necessary for the promotion of the interests of his Theatre, accord with the honorable support of the higher line of the Drama. There is not a doubt, but that a just public taste may be formed and preserved by a judicious manager; and, therefore, it only requires a powerful competition between our two national Theatres, in regard to the intellectual merits of their productions, to attract general attention, and to make the qualities of their Dramas the subject of strict criticism; thus begetting a desire to judge rather than to be dazzled.

Mr. T. COOKE's CONCERT.

THIS gentleman, last night, gave his annual Benefit Concert at the Argyle Rooms; a most numerous and fashionable assemblage graced the occasion.

Mr. COOKE sang the Recitative and Air, Comfort ye, and every Valley, in a very impressive style...and his violin execution in the accompaniments to Miss Cramer, and, the Rondo, was admirable. Miss Cooke, his daughter, appeared here for the first time in public, and sang an Italian duet with Miss M. Tree very delightfully: but her second effort "Una voce pcca fa," was executed in so enchanting a manner that a rapturous encore ensued. Miss Cooke appears about fifteen, her person at present petite, her countenance very pleasing, and her voice of a quality that, under her father's able instructions, gives hope of her arriving at the highest excellence.

Miss M. TREE was enthusiastically encored in "When in disgrace," and the Air from Rossini, by Madame VESTRIS, was most sweetly and chastely sung. Indeed the whole of the vocalists gave the highest delight: and amongst the instrumental, we cannot omit mentioning Mr. NICHOLSON, who in his pot pourri on the flute, introduced in a beautiful manner. The last Rose of Summer, and gave a very original finale of his own composition which does him equal credit as a composer, and a performer on the sweet instrument in which he excels.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. RUSSELL, who takes his benefit this evening, quits the theatre. His long standing, and merit as a performer, and his general attention and politeness as stage manager, will, we hope, obtain him a proof, to night, that the Public do not forget these recommendations of their old friend.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. RUSSELL had a very full House, crowded in every part, on the Evening of Saturday, the 30th of March, when this Theatre closed its season of 200 nights. We are glad to find that this gentleman met such support, for his merits as an actor are of a very respectable order, and we understand he has filled the office of Deputy Manager, with a good deal of zeal and industry, and "borne his faculties so meekly," that he has gone out of place, unlike many other official personages, with the good will and esteem of all his professional acquaintances. Both the quantity and quality of the entertainments on this occasion offered a sufficient proof of this fact, for they were not over until one o'clock on Sunday morning; and, if we may judge by the applause which were bestowed upon them, they certainly appeared to be of a very palatable nature. The principal novelty of the evening, was the appearance of Mr. KEAN, for the first time, in the part of Osmond in The Castle Spectre. It was rather a successful effort, and he succeeded in bringing a great many beauties out of the floundering and turgid beauties which he was compelled to utter—but the character is every way unworthy of his talents, and the play itself has had its day, and must give place to more novel horrors, consequently, we do not wish to see it repeated. Miss KELLY was an interesting and effective Angela, and Mr. COOPER was quite declamatory enough in Hassan.

The Mayor of Garrat was not remarkable for any thing but RUSSELL's performance of Jerry Sneak, which, as usual, was highly original and pleasant. The whole of the performance concluded with what was called in the bills a Musical Melange, consisting of songs and duets, "and all that sort of thing," which was very well managed and executed for the most part, but came rather too late to be relished according to its deserts. Previous to this Mr. R. came forward and addressed the audience. He informed them that his engagements at this theatre were brought to a close, and said it was a painful task to him to take leave of such old friends and patrons, and to quit the society of his brothers and sisters behind the curtain, but he hoped to meet with their support and friendship on other boards. We must not forget to mention the appearance of our old acquaintance INGLE-

DON, who really looked quite renovated, and did Admiral Benbow full justice. We find he is about to take a Benefit, and hope he will find that the public have not forgotten his claims upon them. It is not to be expected that he should give them the same portion of delight for their money as formerly, but there is no trifling enjoyment in the presence of an old face which brings with it a long train of agreeable recollections.

Mr. ELLISTON, on Wednesday last, called a Meeting of his performers in the Green-Room, and informed them, that intending in future to take on himself the duties of Stage-Manager, he had dispensed with the valuable services of Mr. RUSSELL, and, that Mr. COOPER had engaged to address the audience on occasions when it would be improper for him as proprietor to appear.

Mrs. EDWIN, we regret to say, is no longer a member of this company. She is an agreeable actress, and cannot fail to meet employment somewhere before a London audience.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Saturday the 30th ult. was performed here, the Play of Henri Quatre, and Katharine and Petruchio. Passion-week immediately followed, during which time no Theatres being open, our Publication was necessarily suspended.

Mr. MACREADY as Henri, played the part in his usual pointed, forcible, and happy manner, and the other principal characters were filled in a satisfactory style, although we cannot but miss Mr. LISTON in Jocrisse. Mr. MEADOWS, his substitute, is a clever, attentive performer, but he has not that peculiar, grotesque humour, which distinguishes his predecessor in the part.

In the after-piece, Mr. YOUNG and Mrs. DAVISON, personated the the hero and heroine with admirable effect.

COVENT GARDEN.

LAST night, Mr. MACREADY acted the hero Wallace, in the Tragedy of that name, and made a deep impression on the audience by his energy and discrimination. It is a performance that, throughout, is marked by beauties, and in the close drew merited applause. Mrs. FAUCIT as Helen, and Mr. ABBOTT as Douglas, played with much feeling and spirit, and some of the other characters were not badly done; but the Play itself is meagre in language, and melodramatic in action; it cannot, therefore, be one that can be often placed before the public with adequate attraction.

After the Tragedy, a new romantic, melodramatic, Fairy Tale, was produced for the first time, under the title of Cherry and Fair Star; or, The Children of Cyprus. It is, as the title indicates, a light and fanciful production, and contains the united attraction of music, dancing, and scenery. In regard to its dialogue, it has the most humble pretensions,—the story is as follows:

The Queen-mother of Cyprus being enraged at the marriage of the King her son with a female of inferior rank, causes the children of this union to be secretly carried off in order to be destroyed, but the agent, a released galley-slave, Sanguinbeck, (Mr. Farley) driven on the voyage towards the shores of the Isle of Tenedos; there he leaves the two infants, Fair Star, (Miss Foote,) and her brother Cherry, (Mrs. Vining,) to perish. It happens, however, that they are found by a peasant, Hassanbad, (Mr. Blanchard,) and are protected and enriched by the Fairy, (Miss Beaumont.) Seventeen years after this, Sanguinbeck is wrecked on the same shore, and with his slave Topack, (Mr. Grimaldi) are perishing of hunger when they are discovered by the now rich Hassanbad and carried to his house. Here the discovery of the children being still alive, causes Sanguinbeck to threaten their lives, but he at length, on Cherry and his sister being impelled by the Fairy through the agency of her sprite (Miss E. Dennett) to embark for Cyprus to find out who their parents are, offers to navigate the beautiful Galley provided for them. They all arrive the Cyprus, where they are found out by the Cadi Giasser,

(Mr. Chapman) who is in the Queen-mother's interest, and Sanguinbeck is told that if he does not by a certain hour effect their death, his life shall pay their forfeit. Sanguinbeck, on this, is forced, contrary to his feelings, to attempt the children's lives. But they are miraculously saved, and Cherry is directed to go through a severe trial of his courage and parental love, by encountering the demons in the fiery wood, who guard a magic fountain, whose waters he must draw, and then proceed to the icy summit of Mount Caucasus, where the secret of his birth will be unfolded. Cherry boldly performs his task, attended by Topac—overpowers the demons, draws the water, and scrambles up the slippery mountain, on reaching the top of which, it divides, and he sinks into the depths which open and expand into a beautiful grotto from whence issues the Fairy attended by Fair Star and all her friends—the parents of the lovely Children of Cyprus, are discovered, and happiness reigns around.

The Scenery defies description—it is beautiful—the dancing is delightful, but the singing very indifferent. The whole was received with great applause. The House was crowded.

DRURY LANE.

THE gloomy Tragedy of George Barnwell was acted here last night; Mr. COOPER was the hapless George, and Miss Edmiston the wily Milwood. They gave considerable effect to their respective parts. Mr. Cooper, in particular, drew down frequent applause by his judicious and feeling performance. With respect to the lady, we feel more and more the confined tones of her voice. Her knowledge of her author is always rightly formed, and her action highly appropriate, but from the want of powerful tones, and commanding figure, her representations do not always sufficiently impress. Miss Edmiston, if at any Theatre of the size of the Haymarket one, would, we are convinced, strike the public greatly in those tragic characters in which she does not fully succeed at Drury Lane. There, her very whisper would be heard, and her figure not so much depressed to the eye by a towering proscenium.

After the tragedy, a new Tale of Enchantment, under the title of Amoran and Hamet, was produced for the first time, with a degree of splendour and taste highly creditable to the establishment.

It was highly successful—We shall say more of it to-morrow.

DRURY LANE.

MORTON'S Comedy of A Cure for the Heart Ache, was acted here, last night, in the most admirable manner. ~~Young Willings~~ by Mr. ELLISTON, was the best representation of the character we have ever witnessed. He has the art of uniting comic with natural effect, beyond any performer at present on the Stage: and prompts the smile and sentimental feeling at the same moment in a manner that brings the character as close to our bosoms as the author could wish. Mr. MUNDEN'S Old Rapid partook of all that genuine humour and soft heartedness, for the expression of which in elderly characters he is so eminent. These gentlemen shared between them by far the most considerable portion of the applauses which marked the delight of the audience throughout this very amusing Comedy. Miss COPELAND represented Jessy Outland, for the first time, with much artlessness—she has that about her appearance, her tones, and manner, which wins our admiration.

We never saw an audience better pleased than on this occasion—the acting, altogether, being excellent: It is with pain, therefore, that we did not find a more crowded house. Comedy is performed here in such superior style, that the part of the public who pretend to taste, should not fail to support its representation by their presence.—Mr. Elliston's intention is to afford an opportunity for its full enjoyment, by offering the most favorite stock pieces: and, surely, the gratification arising from these is of a higher and more delightful, and lasting nature, than what is to be drawn from bombastic Operatic Dramas, where less refined thoughts and language, and most unnatural situation and action, abound. This evening, The School for Scandal is to be acted, with a new Lady Teazle; and, although Sheridan is encountered by Goldsmith at Covent Garden, we anticipate, with the assistance of the new Eastern Tale of Almorán and Hamet, a full house. This Tale is of a much more intellectual description than the one at Covent Garden, and consequently such parents who would draw their children's attention to something that can engage the mind whilst the imagination is delighted, should take them to see this piece, instead of those where mere show is the principal thing held in view. The story is that of two rival brothers, Princes of Persia, who are the joint heirs to the throne, and are equally in love with the fair Almeida. Hamet is her choice—and Almorán actuated by revenge and ambition, seeks supernatural aid to obtain possession of the Princess, and an undivided throne. The choice of good and evil is placed before him: his virtue struggles for a moment, but yields to the evil genius Zadoc. Henceforward, by this necromancer's aid, he interrupts his brother's happiness, and tears from him his betrothed Almeida and the crown. But Hamet, who has sought the paths of virtue, is protected by the good Perii Azael, and at length triumphs. There are some inferior characters that tend to fill up the intervals of the main action. Amidst the gorgeous and beautiful scenery, there is one that never was surpassed, namely, the Seraglio Gardens, with an illuminated temple, kept cool by the envelopement of a shower of real water.

Two small accidents occurred in the second act—one to the great Elephant, and the other to little Miss Povey. The former distinguished performer slipped and nearly fell prostrate, and the lady during the dancing duet with Mr. Harley, missed her footing, and fell, but Mr. H. quickly set her on her legs again—an encore was called for.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Slave, and the new melo-dramatic tale were performed last night to a very crowded house. Mr. LISTON re-appeared at this theatre as Fogrum in the opera. The new arrangement by which the Haymarket Theatre does not open until near the close of the winter houses, leaves him at liberty to continue his services here.—He was warmly greeted on this his return from Bath. Mr. MAC-READY'S Gambia, was marked with his usual energy, and received with great applause. Mr. EMERY came in for his full share of approbation in Sam Sharpset, as did Mr. JONES in his brother Mathew. Miss M. TREE sang and acted Zelinda with much sweetness. Mrs. DAVENPORT'S Mrs. Von Frump was very laughable: the rest of the characters were well sustained. Cherry and Fair Star followed, and dazzled with its splendid scenery.

THE ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE

An Opera, new to this country, was produced, last night. It is by MOSCA, and entitled, "Idue pretendi delusi. (The Two Suitors Deceived) The very title tells the object of the plot. A lady deceives her two disagreeable suitors to gain her favored lover: The music is light and playful. It met success.

DRURY LANE.

Our expectations were fulfilled, last night—a numerous and elegant audience graced this House to see The School for Scandal, and Almorán and Hamet. One principal attraction of the evening, was to see the debut of Miss GRIMANI (from the Belfast Theatre) in the difficult character of Lady Teazle. This lady, we have at once to declare, is an accomplished actress. She thoroughly understands her part, and gives to it every delicate finish of tone and action. Her weakest power of representation is in her features, which are not very susceptible of varied expression. In person Miss Grimani is tall and slender—her movements graceful—her age—but to meddle with a lady's age is almost too delicate matter—we, therefore, would leave our readers in doubt whether she be twenty or thirty. Of this, however, we can speak with certainty that she possesses an excellent talent for Comedy, in which opinion the audience of last night, fully agreed with us.

Mr. MUNDEN never acted better, and never elicited genuine laughter, and admiration by his rich humour, than he did on this occasion in Sir Peter Teazle.

Mr. ELLISTON performed Charles with much animation, Mr. COOPER'S Joseph Surface is by no means his best representation; his hypocritical manner is not as if it were natural to him, but assumed. Mr. MACREADY at the other House, gives to this character a somewhat different effect: he does not dress it so trimly as Mr. Cooper, which is more consistent with Joseph's affected love of plain virtue. With some deductions on the latter gentleman's style, the acting in the Screen-scene was equal to any thing ever exhibited on the Stage for comical effect. The audience shouted with laughter—particularly at Munden's manner of discovering to Charles, the hiding of the supposed little french milliner. Miss Grimani here shewed great knowledge of her art, and gained merited applause.

Mr. LOVEDAY was very respectable as Sir Oliver; and Mr. KNIGHT made a tolerable Moses, but Zekiel Homespun is more in his line. The other characters were extremely well supported; and the Comedy, altogether, is so excellently represented, that a repetition should certainly take place.

COVENT GARDEN.—She Stoops to Conquer, and Cherry and Barb Star. drew an excellent House, last night.

MR. MATHEWS' NEW ENTERTAINMENT, (Concluded.)

It may be supposed that Mr. Mathews's representation of this comical old blunderer, is very amusing. He next introduces us to some of his Dublin acquaintances; and with a humorous Song, entitled "An Irish Rubber at Whist," finishes the First Part of his Entertainment.

The Second Part he commences with a description of some more of the Dublin Company of Comedians. Mr. George Augustus Pibley, was a young Gentleman, enamoured of his own person, in which he discovered the line of beauty at every turn. Mr. Trombone, of whom Mr. M. relates some oddities, was a thick, short, big-headed personage, with a voice like a bull's. Then there was Mr. O'Flannagan, who thought to appear less Hibernianized in the Play-bills, by taking the name of O'Finnagin. This man piqued himself on the elegance and correctness of his pronunciation. On one occasion at rehearsal, he pronounced full—ful— the Manager objected to this—Mr. O'Flannagan argued that his way was the most correct, but was compelled to yield the point for the moment. Next morning, however, he made his appearance with a copy of Hudibras in his hand, triumphantly exclaiming he had authority to prove he was in the right, and the Manager wrong—so turns up—and points out two lines terminating with bull and full—"there" cried Mr. O'F.—"there, did'nt I tell you I was right—mark the rhyme, Sir—but—ful!" During Mr. Mathews' engagement amongst these dim Stars—the celebrated, eccentric, and unfortunate George Frederick Cooke, came to Dublin, and lodged in the same House with Mr. M. who, therefore, had ample opportunity to become acquainted with his singularities, of which he gives a humorous example, imitating to the life the peculiar tones and manner of poor George. He pays him the just tribute of having an excellent heart; and states that he had but an occasional weakness of falling under the influence of the bottle. Mr. Mathews reverting to the acquirements of Mr. Pibley, lets us know that he had learnt the use of arms in a London Corps, and in a Song, gives an account of a Volunteer Field-Day and Sham Fight.

That eminent man the late Mr. Curren of the Irish Bar, was acquainted with Mr. Mathews, and knowing his powers of imitation, and that he had sketched him off, one day invited him to dinner to complete the study of his countenance, tones, and manner: and Mr. M. did not fail to benefit by the occasion, for he exhibits the Orator in an admirable manner, in the delivery of one of his famous speeches. After this, Mr. Mathews introduces an old Irish drinking ballad, called "Croskeen Lawn" (white jug) which has wildness and plaintiveness enough to charm a Paddy into a Whiskey-tub.

Mr. Mathews went from Dublin to Cork; and on the road, when near Fermoy, a pretty little town, eighteen miles from Cork, he overtook a countryman driving a pig. Sure of a queer answer, he thought he would ask Pat a question. "May I ask where you are driving that Pig to?"—"Whisht!" cried Pat. "Whisht—what do ye mean?"—"Whisht honey"—"What you won't answer me?"—"Oeb, my dear, you are as welcome as the flowers of May to an answer—that you are—but don't spake so loud—(whispering) don't let an' the driving piggy to Cork sure, but making him believe its only to Fermoy."

From Ireland Mr. Mathews went to Wales, and remained at Swansea a considerable time—from thence he went to Bristol determined to abandon the Stage, (the miseries of which he had pretty deeply tasted,) and return home to his Father—but, as fate would have it, a play-bill was put into his hand, and the histrionic fit returned. After a short visit to his family he got an engagement in the York Company then under the management of the well-known and eccentric TATE WILKINSON, who was far advanced in life, with his memory much impaired, and a laughable feeling of disgust on his mind respecting Rats. Mr. M. makes out of the peculiarities of Tate a humorous tale of his manner of receiving him at York: and describes his blunders in directing letters, one of which, intended for a land-lady who had put him into a bed with damp sheets, and a room full of rats, he directed to the grave John Phillip Kemble, and imitates the supposed reading thereof in the solemn tones of that gentleman, with truly laughable effect—whilst the letter intended for Mr. Kemble was directed to the Land-lady, who thus stood invited to undertake the arduous parts of Cardinal Wolsey, Macbeth, &c. &c. After a curious description of some of the York Corps—another meeting with his old friend Mr. Ab Lloyd, who begged to know if he thought him thinner—and a rencontre with a convivial, rich, old Nabob, one Mr. Mark Magnum, who interspersed all his discourse with “all that sort of thing” and “every thing in the world” which Mr. Mathews humorously introduces, in an imitation of the gentleman, he received a letter from Mr. COLMAN, Manager of the little Theatre in the Haymarket, inviting him to his boards, which Mr. Mathews gladly accepted, and bidding adieu to his country friends, realized his fond hopes by appearing at the above Theatre, with the greatest success, on the 15th of May, 1803, as Jabal in the Jew, and Lingo in the Agreeable Surprise. Mr. Mathews says—“I was accused of robbing the public of a few smiles, found guilty, and transported.” Here he concludes the History of his Youthful Days; in the very slight outline of which, we have been unable to convey any adequate idea of the amusement to be derived from the detail by himself. Our object has been to give the principal points of his early biography, and to induce those who would pass a few hours in very entertaining company, to visit Mr. Mathews AT HOME.

DRURY LANE.

LAST night, The Heir at Law, and Almorán and Hamet, were performed to a better Box-house, than Gallery or Pit. COLMAN'S humour shines eminently in the Comedy; which was very well acted, particularly on the part of Mr. HARLEY, whose Doctor Panglos is amusing. We, however, think Mr. FAWCETT'S representation of the Doctor preferable in some respects, as he looks the character better, having a good deal of scholastic expression, in his features, possibly, arising from his habits of tutoring the underlings of the Theatre in his capacity of Stage-manager. Mr. Harley plays it more like the head school-boy taking off his master.

MISS COPELAND as Cicely Homespun, displayed that innocent simplicity of manner for which she is so distinguished.

The Tale of Enchantment followed with beautiful effect.

COVENT GARDEN.

DRURY LANE.

The School for Scandal, was repeated, last night, to an elegant audience. We have only to confirm our recent remarks on the highly attractive manner in which it was performed. Miss GRIMANI is certainly a considerable acquisition to this Stage. Some of the newspaper critics have deemed her better calculated for Tragedy than Comedy, and found their opinion on the superior manner in which she, in the screen-scene, reproves Joseph, and represents her own humbled feelings. We think it very possible that this lady has versatile talents, but her Comedy is so pleasing we do not particularly desire to see her quit that line; and we would recommend, for her own sake, that, unless her judicious friends and advisers are decidedly in favor of her tragic powers, they should not prompt her to depart from Comedy, wherein her success is fully established.

Mr. KEAN is engaged for a fixed number of nights by Mr. HARRIS, for his Dublin Theatre. He proceeds there when his services at Drury Lane shall close for the season.

An estimate has been made of the cost of contracting and beautifying Drury Lane Theatre during the recess: it is said, it amounts to £3500.

COVENT GARDEN.

A very brilliant audience was attracted here, last night, by The clandestine Marriage. Lord Ogleby by Mr. W. FARREN. This is one of the best, if not the very best of the performances of this excellent actor. He looks the character to the very life; and throws into it just as much of the ridiculous as might be naturally exhibited in the tottering ruins of amorous nobility. The decrepid puppyism—the mockery of supposed passion—the old-school air, Mr. Farren represents in the most perfect and amusing manner.

Miss DANCE is acting at Bath for a few nights.

“Hotspur” is informed that his letters to the publisher amount to a fraud; and that they shall be attended to in a manner he will little relish, if he repeats his deception.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE attraction of Saturday night's performances was great, the House was very full. We do not mean to say, that Henri Quatre, is worthy of the honor of having crowded audiences, for, in truth, it is only fit to be an after-piece, and might with great convenience to common-sense and good taste, be represented in two Acts, shorn of its drivelling scenes, and left to its mock-historic, and slender humour, but we think a piece wherein there are a few opportunities for Mr. MACREADY to shew his acting, where Mr. LISTON can have latitude for his grotesque style, and Miss M. FRET and Miss HALLANDE can warble, must have some power of drawing together those who are not very fastidious about the sterling qualities of their entertainments. Then, there was Cherry and Fair Star—who could resist going to see such a pretty collection of pictures? If the story is not exactly worthy of being dramatised for grown-up persons, still there are enough babies in this metropolis to delight in a fairy tale; and when we consider how charmingly Mrs. VIXING and Miss FOOTE personate the hero and heroine, really, we cannot wonder at their having many admirers. But with respect to the latter lady, we regret we cannot go to the length of commendation that silly Sunday paper, "JOHN BULL," does. In yesterday's number that "HUMBUC" Gazette, idolizes Miss FOOTE in terms that must make her feel a little suspicious the object is to ridicule her.

After speaking of Cherry and Fair Star, it says:

"But all that ART has done, magnificent as are the decorations, and gorgeous as are the dresses, sinks before that master-piece of NATURE, the heroine, Miss FOOTE: she seems like a divinity just lighted on the earth. There certainly never beamed a more perfect FAIR STAR than this enchanting girl; nor did we ever see her look more beautiful than in this particular character." !!!

DRURY LANE.

Wild Oats and Giovanni in London were the entertainments here on Saturday evening—Rover by Mr. ELLISTON. He plays this part with great animation, and keeps the house in very good humour. Mr. MUNDEN's Ephraim Smooth, is a very sleek, quaint, backsliding, performance. John Dory was excellently done by Mr. LOVEDAY, who is always successful in rough, blunt, characters.

We were glad to see Mrs. W. WEST again in Lady Amaranth. Her sweet, lady-like manner, renders this character very engaging.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Tragedy of Macbeth, was performed, last night, to a most elegant and numerous audience. Mr. Young represented Macbeth. Whatever this gentleman undertakes, he throws into it much vigour and discrimination: his elocution is excellent: his taste correct. He often makes striking points in action, and elicits beauties of expression, that have the happiest effect. But with all his powers for forming a great actor, there, still, is an occasional want of something to render his performance what it ought to be. He too frequently gives instances of passion-less acting; where the soul of the character is absent, and nothing is present but the machinery of the figure moved on established principles. We will allow him to have great merit in the two chief scenes of this play; namely, that where the murder of Duncan is effected, and that of the banquet. In the former, Mr. Young, certainly, displayed the very highest excellence of his art:—in the soliloquy on the visionary dagger, he gave the picture of an imagination infected with the dread design he was about to put in execution, with appalling truth; and ably marked the sinking horror that benumbed his faculties after the perpetration of the horrid deed. The Banquet-scene was certainly his best effort: here his attitudes were admirable, his expression in perfect union with his action, and the whole presenting the truest resemblance of a murderer's dismay before the shadow of his victim, that the fancy could form. He was loudly applauded, throughout, and at his fall.

Mrs. FAUCIT played Lady Macbeth. This, we presume, was a work of necessity, for if it was one of a desired nature on the part of the lady, never did the ambition of eminent distinction more absurdly prompt to a weak attempt. Mrs. FAUCIT is a melo-dramatic actress; that is to say, she is competent to give the vulgar outline of tragic effect, but the delicate filling-up is far—far beyond her powers. In a young person, whose genius may not have fully expanded itself, we like to see attempts to rise; but when one whose age, moderate talents, and fixed habits, have long settled the proper limits of her efforts, we rather feel disgust at the endeavour to bound from the tract nature has pointed out. Mrs. Faucit, kept within her proper sphere, may have admirers, over whom she may extend the influence of such attractions as she possesses, for some time to come; but let her not aim at a reputation quite out of her reach. Her performance of Lady Macbeth was very unequal; and often quite out of keeping with the character.

Mr. ABBOTT is a very miserable Macduff; he totally failed to make any impression by his faint woe on learning the death of his little ones—if they had been so many blind pups he could not have shewn less marks of feeling.

DRURY LANE.

Dr. HADLEY's entertaining Comedy of The Suspicious Husband, was performed here, last night. Miss GRIMANI was, at first, announced to play Clarinda, but yesterday's Play-bills shewed that Mrs. GLOVER was to take the part. We were rather surprised at this change: for we understood the former lady's health was not the cause. We believe the matter stands thus. Mr. ELLISTON having had a very favorable report of Miss G's acting, engaged her without seeing her; but after her performance of Lady Teazle, he felt inclined to change his opinion, and so interdicts her further performance. If this is true, it is another painful instance of that fatal vacillation which is ruining this concern. Certainly, Miss G is an actress of very considerable talents, but the report of her personal appearance could not have been so decidedly favorable as to warrant a blind engagement. Mrs. Glover is a very clever actress, but her person is quite unfit for the representation of such characters as Clarinda; and the public, who look for youth as well as beauty and talent in parts of that description, can only feel disgust at the absence of any of those requisites to a full enjoyment of the winning vivacity intended for them by the author. Then, there is Mr. POPE; whose fault is that of Time; can a man bordering on seventy represent with effect the part of a husband supposed to be on pretty equal terms of age with his wife, and yet who is suspicious of her deviating! These are no trifles in the scale of amusement, and are not likely to out weigh previously existing prejudices.

Mr. ELLISTON acted Ranger with considerable effect, yet we do not think he was in tip-top spirits. Mr. COOPER was a heavy lover for so light a Clarinda.

There was a very thin House; and in such cases a great damp is thrown on the exertions of the performers, which on this occasion was very observable.

COVENT GARDEN AND DRURY LANE.

It is utterly disgraceful to the public, that this Theatre should be neglected on occasions when it acts plays more worthy of being attended than such as are represented at the other house on the same evening. This was the case, last night; whilst Covent Garden was crowded to see the Farce of The Two Pages of Frederick the Great, The Beggars' Opera, cut down to two Acts, and the Fairy Tale of Cherry and Fair Star, Drury was almost deserted, although COLMAN'S most delightful Comedy of The Poor Gentleman, was performed, and in a manner that has rarely been equalled! So much for public taste:—It is, we repeat, a perfect disgrace to the town, to see it give a childish preference to light, heartless, glittering, unimproving performances, instead of seeking the enjoyment to be derived from a play full of genuine natural humour, and noble unaffected sentiment.

Our readers will not suspect us of any partiality—we have given too many proofs of an entire disregard for every thing but the welfare of the British Stage: and we may therefore be credited for entertaining an anxious desire to see the establishments of both our national Theatres equally supported when they equally merit the public favor. This is not a question about the general conduct or interests of their Managers, but it is a question whether the public are to abandon all steady countenance of the ennobling branches of the Drama, by flying from it to encourage the efforts of Scenery-painters and machinists. We declare that, last night, the performance of The Poor Gentleman was so excellent in all parts, that we never more fully enjoyed the rational, feeling, outre, and enlivening spirit with which it is fraught throughout.

The character of Sir Robert Bramble entered into the very soul of Mr. MUNDEN, and he acted it with a corresponding testy humour, and unscrewed feeling, to the marked delight of the whole audience. He was excellently supported by Mr. GATTIE, and Mr. COOPER, as old Humphrey, and Frederick; and Mr. HARLEY as Ollapod, and Mr. KNIGHT as Stephen were highly comical; and Mr. POWELL was very impressive as the Poor Gentleman, Lieutenant Worthington.

Mr. Watkinson, who performed some time ago at the Haymarket Theatre, appeared at Drury for the first time as Corporal Foss. He is a very judicious actor, and is, therefore, a great acquisition to the house.

Of Mrs. W. WEST we must speak with peculiar pleasure; for her sweet delineation of the affectionate Emily came home to every heart. Mrs. HARLOWE'S Miss Mac Tub, was very amusing; and indeed every other character in the piece was well performed. No audience was ever more continuously delighted from the beginning to the end, and we had nothing to regret, but that The Poor Gentleman had not more friends to visit and reward his merits.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

WE went to see, or rather hear Mons. ALEXANDRE, the Ventriloquist, the other evening, and were extremely well pleased with him. His powers of Ventriloquism are of the very highest order, and, in some instances, his performances are truly astonishing. The Characters which he introduces have nothing very new or striking about them; but he contrives to put them into some very entertaining situations, and makes them utter a good many smart, though now and then, rather old jokes. Altogether, the dramatic part of the entertainment, which, although not the best, is pleasant and well-managed. The scene at the Tooth Drawer's is too long, and a little curtailment would be of service throughout. His most original and extraordinary efforts, without doubt, are his imitations of animals, dogs barking, cats mewing, and a child crying, are admirable, and then his plaining, sawing, and tuning the guitar, together with frying eggs, and other things, are so good that they should be witnessed by every one who has a couple of hours to spare for such enjoyments.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Rivals and Cherry and Fair Star; drew an elegant and most numerous audience here, last night. The Comedy was supported by the principal comic strength of the company, and had the powerful addition of Mr. YOUNG as Hunkland, in which character he exhibited the doubtings and misgivings of the self-plagued lover, in a distinct and chaste style. Mr. W. FARREN'S Sir Anthony Absolute, is an admirable piece of acting. It differs from Mr. MUNDEN'S manner of representing it in this point: the former has more of the air of the old man of fashion, whilst the latter possesses more of the natural warmth of an impatient resolved temper, mixed with the glow of fatherly affection. Captain Absolute was genteely represented by Mr. JONES: and Sir Lucius O'Trigger, had a very respectable supporter in Mr. CONNOR, who is the only gentleman now on this Stage that can be so bold as to undertake the character: He swings about a little too much as if he had been elevated from the Corps de Ballet, but taking his acting altogether it was by no means contemptible. Bob Acres in Mr. LISTON'S keeping every one knows is an irresistible piece of laughable Comedy. In the duel-scene he personated the melting of courage in a most dissolving manner; he was the very essence of pusillanimity, distilled by the fire stirred up by Sir Lucius; and seemed almost to drop liquid-like into the bowels of earth, in order to be hid from the casualties on its surface. Mrs. DAVISON represented Julia in a very feeling manner; and Miss FOOTE as Lydia Languish entered fully into the spirit of the fair romancer. The whole Comedy went off with unusual spirit and applause.

DRURY LANE.

THE Comedy of The Provoked Husband; or, A Journey to London, was extremely well performed here last night to a very thin audience.

Lord Townly was filled by Mr. COOPER with much impressiveness and feeling; and Mrs. W. WEST really surprised us by the excellence of her acting in the giddy Lady Townly. Miss GRIMAN'S Lady Grace was not sufficiently marked with sentiment; she too often smiled when she should have been pensive at the follies of her sister-in-law. Miss Jenny was done in true hoydenish style by Mrs. ORRER; and Mr. KNIGHT never drew more laughter than by his Squire Richard. Mr. MUNDEN was not a little condescending to take such a part as John Moody.

COVENT GARDEN.

Rob Roy, was performed, last night, in its usual manner. It is a drama that depends, like the original from whence it is taken, on the portraying of certain characters, rather than on any interest in the story. It might have been made more of, if the author had been courageous enough to have deviated further from the novel, and have cast the whole in a form that would have produced a more continuous interesting effect. There is an obvious fault in all the pieces adapted to the Stage from the Scotch Novels, as they are called: namely, that they are constructed in a manner that requires a previous acquaintance with the source they are drawn from, in order fully to comprehend them, and enter into their spirit. These manufactured articles are, perhaps, profitable speculations to a Theatre like this, that can command the important aids of excellent musical talent and scenic skill; to which being appended some declamatory opportunities for a MACREADY, and some quaintnesses for a LISON, a semblance of merit is created with the little-judging multitude, that begets something like popularity. The mind is pleased through their means, more by the happy remembrances and associations of ideas, occasioned by a romantic scene, or a plaintive national air, than by the solidity of their sentiment, or the peculiarity of their humor. The House was very well attended.

To-morrow, the musical drama of The Slave. On Monday, will be revived Shakspeare's Tragedy of Julius Cæsar. On Tuesday, Shakspeare's Comedy of Errors, with music by Bishop, and on Wednesday, Sheridan's Comedy of The Rivals.

We understand a new Musical Play is in rehearsal, and will soon be produced.

DRURY LANE.

COMEDY is so excellently performed here, that it is astonishing it does not meet with more patrons. It is painful to see the best exertions thrown away on an indifferent public. Why this House should not meet its due share of support on occasions when its representations ought to be considered equally attractive with those of the sister establishment, it is impossible to say, unless we were to suppose that it has, from a common caprice in the beau monde, become unfashionable, because in the present season it may have acted a greater number of genuine tragic and comic pieces than Covent Garden. On referring to our Indexes; we find, that from the date of the opening of the latter Theatre, down to the last acting night before the Easter holidays, the two Houses have performed plays 134 nights, which period has been thus employed:—

DRURY LANE, has acted.	COVENT GARDEN, has acted :
Tragedy - - - 44 times.	Tragedy - - - - 13 times.
Comedy - - - 31 do.	Comedy, and do. with
Opera, and Musical	Music and Spectacle 43 do.
Dramas - - - 17 do.	Opera, and Musical
Farcical 1st. pieces 18 do.	Dramas, with Spec-
Melo-drama 1st ps. 24 do.	tacle - - - - 78 do.

It may in some measure be gathered from this statement which Theatre has best maintained the character of the British Stage.

The Road to Ruin was acted last night with admirable effect. The cast was the same as on most of the former occasions, with the exceptions of Mr. COOPER as Harry Dornton, instead of Mr. ELLISTON, and Miss COPELAND as Sophia.—Each performed in a manner highly creditable, although a little more natural vivacity in the former would be desirable.

The House was thinly attended.

COVENT GARDEN.

LAST night, a most numerous audience were drawn hither, to see The School for Scandal, and Cherry and Fair Star. The Pit overflowed at an early hour, and the Boxes were most elegantly attended. The Comedy was admirably performed—the characters being filled as on its former representation here, with the exception of Joseph Surface, which was taken by Mr. YOUNG in the place of Mr. MACREADY. The difference of style this change exhibited in acting the part, was very remarkable. The former gentleman plays it like a man of fashion, possessed of that hypocrisy which cannot but be made prominent; whilst the latter acts it as if he had been educated under puritanical discipline. The dress of each accords with their respective conceptions: Mr. Young assumes a gay attire—Mr. Macready a plain dress, with his hair most methodistically combed across his forehead. Each renders the character very striking; but the question is, which of them conforms most to the intentions of the author. We are inclined to give it in favor of Mr. Young; for Joseph is represented as moving in fashionable circles, and it cannot be supposed he would have been admitted there with a conventicle air about him.

Charles was represented by Mr. C. KEMBLE, in his usual gentlemanly manner; and all the other characters, of which we have spoken before, were most ably personated. The audience seemed highly entertained.

DRURY LANE.

THERE was a more numerous assemblage here, last night, than we have lately seen; and we rejoice at any symptoms of old Drury being again adequately patronised. Secrets worth Knowing, and Paul and Virginia, were the performances.

In the former, Mr. HARLEY acted Rostrum, for the first time; a part which we some time ago stated to be better calculated for him than for Mr. ELLISTON who usually played it. Our opinion has been verified by his success in the good-hearted auctioneer, who caused much merriment and was greatly applauded. Mr. MUNDEN as old April, Mr. KNIGHT as Old Nick, and Mrs. ORGER as English Sally were very amusing; and MADAME VESTRIS as Rose Sydney, and Mrs W. WEST as Mrs. Greville were very interesting.

Paul and Virginia is a delightful Piece of its kind.

DRURY LANE.

ON Saturday evening MORTON'S Comedy of Speed the Plough, and the Farce of My Spouse and I, were performed to the nearest approach to a literally empty house we have ever yet beheld within these walls, except during a rehearsal. We most sincerely regretted such a deplorable sight; for it was impossible to laugh at the mock mirth on the stage, with the consciousness that the entertainment eked out for us was attended with a positive loss of at least £100, to the Manager, and a waste of whatever spirits the performers could bring with them under such gloomy circumstances. Really, we pitied Mr. MUNDEN, who, as Sir Abel Handy could scarcely manufacture a smile. He often appeared lost to the business of the stage, and started at the cue, like a man called to in his sleep. It would be absurd to think of criticising the acting, for it must be supposed, that it could not but suffer from the impressions caused by the dreary prospect. Mr. LOVEDAY, however, we may say, was a very boorish Farmer Ashfield, and very like some clod-hoppers we have seen in a state of nature.

This evening Mr. KEAN resumes his labours in Richard the Third; and there cannot be a doubt of a numerous audience gracing the house on the occasion.

COVENT GARDEN.

MORTON'S musical jumble, called The Slave, effected, with the aid of the succeeding Fairy Tale, what his Comedy at the other house, aided by a laughable Farce, could not do—namely—assemble a numerous and elegant audience. The Pit overflowed at first price, and the Galleries were well filled, but the Boxes were rather thinly attended. Mr. MACREADY is quite at home in the part of Gambia, there being some room for his energetic and discriminating powers: without him the piece would be insignificant, although the author has drawn largely on Southern's Oronoko for a considerable part of his materials. Mr. JONES as Matthew Sharpset, and Mr. EMERY as his brother of York, together with Mr. LISTON'S elegant Fogrum, and Mrs. DANENPORT, hottentot—venus-like Miss Von Frump kept the audience in a half-smile;—whilst Mr. DERUSET as Captain Clifton, and Miss STEPHENS as Zerlinda, acted and sang very pleasingly.

Need we say that the great and little babies were quite delighted with Cherry and Fair Star? Julius Cæsar is performed to-night with a host of talent.

COVENT GARDEN.

SELDOM has it been the case of late that we could speak of any thing like an animated feeling in the public mind, at the production of a Play wherein there was not more attraction from shew, scenery, or music, than from the bare qualities of language, general construction, and anticipated action. But, last night, was a redeeming one, for the honor of our Metropolitan taste; and crowds were seen at an early hour pressing on towards this Theatre, to witness the performance of Julius Cæsar. The Pit was filled in a few minutes after the doors were opened, the Boxes also were quickly occupied, so that before half-price there were only a few seats vacant in the slips. The Galleries were completely filled; and the lower one contained many genteel people who had been disappointed of getting seats elsewhere.

The mere representation of this Tragedy, however replete with beauties in the dialogue, we are conscious could not have produced such eagerness to behold it, had not such a host of talent been thrown in, to give full vigour to the admirable speeches with which it abounds.

When we mention that Mr. Young represented Brutus—Mr. MACREADY, Cassius, Mr. C. KEMBLE, Marc Antony, who is there that cannot at once perceive the stimulating cause of that enthusiasm to behold excellence, which last night urged thousands to visit this Theatre? In speaking of this triumvirate of talent, we cannot hold up one alone to superior admiration; but each in his own distinct manner. The powerful, the classical, and measured elocution of Mr. Young, well became the philosophic, patriotic Brutus—the rapid, energetic natural delivery of Mr. Macready, rendered his Cassius a most striking performance—the elegant, and equally forcible, and skilful declamatory powers of Mr. C. Kemble, presented Antony in all his glowing colours of friendship for Cæsar, and all his dexterous power of popular oratory. It was the finest exhibition of acting perhaps ever seen in so many parts in one play. Mr. Young's delivery of the speech from the tribune, was excellent; being marked by those judicious pauses, changes of tone, and happy emphases, for which he is so eminent. The effect was great, and met the loudest testimonies of approbation. The quarrel-scene between Brutus and Cassius, was admirable. The calm severity of the former, and the impatience of the latter, hardly repressed by the respect and love he bore to Brutus were displayed with such correctness and vividness, that no acting could produce a more powerful effect. Antony's oration over the dead body of Cæsar was beautifully delivered by Mr. C. Kemble—it was impossible not to be warmed into the same feelings of commiseration for the murdered Julius that seizes the multitude. The tone in which after a pause of feeling, he says :—

“—————Bear with me,

My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,

And I must pause till it come back to me.”

was extremely touching: and his whole deportment was in admirable union with the emotion that influenced his voice.

The crowded and brilliant audience testified their delight throughout, and the Curtain fell amidst cheers: Mr. Kemble then came forward and announced the repetition of this ably acted Tragedy for Saturday next.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN resumed his post here, last night, in Richard the Third. The House was well attended, and he was warmly greeted. We have so often been called on to notice his performance of the bloody tyrant, that we can hardly make any new remark on it upon this occasion. Mr. Kean stands unrivalled in this character: he is suited for it in every way: neither a portly figure, nor an uniformly harmonious voice, are required to give effect to it: whilst that astonishing talent which he possesses of expressing the furious passions, and the arts of a cool malignity, render him the fittest representative of the part now on the Stage. He was loudly applauded throughout.

Mrs. GLOVER played the Queen of Edward the Fourth, with most powerful natural effect. Her parting with her children was a moving scene, for she not only acted but looked so like a mother, that her distress seemed real. The versatile talents of this lady fit her either for Tragedy or Comedy; and we have only to regret that her person does not convey in the latter department as full an idea of airy youth, as her vivacity and arch expression.

LYCEUM.

THIS evening Mr. BRYANT, who has long been a favorite at the Cobourg Theatre, in the line of Irish characters, takes a Benefit at the Lyceum. The pieces selected, and the introduced songs, are likely to afford much entertainment to his friends.

DRURY LANE.

The Man of the World, was acted, last night, to a very thin House. Mr. KEAN's attempt at the character of Sir Pertinax we are convinced was the result of a good-natured acquiescence in the wishes of the Manager, and not in conformity to his own judgment. It is not a successful performance, and should be abandoned: it is not calculated to please either the English or the Scots—for Mr. Kean gives us no dialect, but a jargon, equally disagreeable to both—the Englishman may call it bad Scotch, and the Scotsman, bad English. We profess to be some judges of the Northern twang: for we have eat bannocks on the banks of the Tay for many a year, and have been domiciled not a hundred miles from "auld Reekie"—Yet we take not to ourselves the honor of being a son of Scotia; although we have had opportunities of hearing the native tongue spoken in most of the districts of the Land o'Cakes, and, therefore, we can assure Mr. Kean his tongue sounds unlike any of them. The late GEORGE FREDERICK COOKE, came the nearest in accent to a Scot, of any Englishman we have ever heard; and this, with his features, and voice, and understanding, made his representation of Sir Pertinax, the finest exhibition ever given of the character since MACKLIN himself played it. Unless Mr. Kean could have brought with him all Cooke's qualities, it was in vain to think of succeeding in this difficult part. That he equals Cooke in judgment cannot be doubted; but he has almost made it appear questionable by yielding to the wishes of others without the requisite command of that true Scottish pronunciation which is bound up with the humor of the character. It becomes very necessary for Mr. Kean to beware of lessening his well-earned reputation in Tragedy by deviations from his proper track. The late and growing success of Covent Garden in the serious branch of the Drama, tenders it incumbent on the Manager, if he means to contest the palm of distinction relative to tragedy, to look about for some able supporters of it in the secondary parts. The Public have long been dissatisfied with the miserable representatives most of such parts have had ; whereby the character of the Theatre has gradually sunk, and by which Mr. Kean is now beginning to find his hold on the public opinion fast giving way for want of those aids, without which, the acting of a Garrick would be thrown away. Audiences may partially applaud, and retire with admiration at individual efforts, but if an entire Play is not acted with adequate proportionable merit, they feel ungratified, and the consequences fall equally on the deserving and the undeserving. Neglect must ensue, and unless sufficient talent is found for every department, ruin will follow.

Mrs. GLOVER acted Lady Rodolpha, with much animation and effect. Yet we would rather have seen Miss BOOTH in that part, which she so ably filled. We are not acquainted with the cause of the change ; we hope it is not on the score of health ; if it is not, we should like to learn the reason.

COVENT GARDEN.

A crowded Pit, and amply filled Boxes, and Galleries, graced the representations of last night, which were The Comedy of Errors, and Cherry and Fair Star.

The Comedy was, as usual, very well performed, and the introduced music pleasingly sung. At its close, the greater part of the audience called for, "God Save the King," as a testimony of respect for the day on which the Anniversary of His Majesty's Birth is celebrated. Some republicans we suppose, thought proper to hiss ; one of them was nearly thrust out of the Pit, which disgrace he was only saved from by suppressing his opposition to the song, which was executed by the whole of the Performers then in the Theatre.

DRURY LANE.

The Castle Spectre was acted last night, when Mr. KEAN again represented Osmond. This Play has long been popular with romance-readers, for it is a tissue of the old bloody-Baron, wronged-virgin, castle-haunted stuff. It has none of the simple and dignified attributes of pure tragedy—it is composed of nothing but violations of probable feeling and situation. However, it affords considerable opportunities for the display of talent in the two principal characters. Osmond has some emotions to express that call into action Mr. Kean's power of delineating passionate ardour and horror. When we say that he executed the part with effect, it is only doing him bare justice: but his manner of describing his dreadful dream was truly appalling:—he seemed, as he narrated the horrid vision, still to have it in his eye—still to feel the embrace of the unearthly being, and bear the impression of its icy-kiss upon his quivering lips, until his whole frame appeared convulsed, and he sunk into the arms of his attendants.

Miss GRIMANI personated Angela, with much ability. Her conception, however, exceeds her powers of execution: she has hardly sufficient volume of voice for the strong expression of the passions; her action although often graceful and appropriate, sometimes wears a stiffness that, it is to be feared, she cannot get quit of, and her features have too little flexibility to produce the slightest effect unaccompanied by the aids of voice and gesture. She acted with animated assiduity, and obtained frequent applauses. The House was better attended than usual,

This Evening Mr. BRAHAM commences his engagement at this Theatre; and as he is the most distinguished male singer we have in this country, the public will not require much urging to lend him their ears.

Miss P. GLOVER, a daughter of Mrs. Glover's, is to appear here on Monday next, for the first time on any Stage, as Juliet. Mr. KEAN is to be the Romeo.

COVENT GARDEN.

A NUMEROUS audience witnessed the performance of The Rivals here last night. Mr. C. KEMBLE acted Capt. Absolute instead of Mr. JONES; and it is no disparagement to the latter excellent performer, to say that the change was for the better.

DRURY LANE.

OPERA, after a short repose, has awoke here with renewed vigour. Last night, Mr. BRAHAM appeared for the first time this season, in the character of the Seraskier, in The Siege of Belgrade. This piece is from the pen of the late Mr. COBB: and is a wretched Drama both as to plot and dialogue; but the music by Storace is so delightful, that it carries it on independent of its faults. We are happy to see Mr. Brabam without any visible injury from time—he wears well; and his pipe keeps admirably in tune; retaining its wonted strength, clearness, and flexibility. Nor did we find that the domestic habits of vulgar matrimony hath in any degree affected his taste; and farther, we did not remark that he was less popular than he used to be, notwithstanding he has so long absented himself for the purpose of circulating his country notes. Mr. WILLIAM COBBETT, if he had been in the theatre, might, perhaps, on account of that recent employment, have been induced to favor him with his disapprobation, and deem him unworthy of benefitting by the exchange for gold and silver. However, Mr. Brabam's ways and means, very fortunately, are not likely to be affected by any opposition; for, last night, there was an unanimous vote of greeting and commendation on his presenting himself to the House;—and the honorable gentleman addressed it in such pleasing strains, that he was cheered from all sides. We only hope when he appears again in his place on next Saturday evening, that a call of the House will ensure a full attendance.

Miss FORDE has not added to her reputation, although she certainly has not tarnished it by her manner of executing the songs in the part of Catherine. This young lady has many pleasing points, and as she only requires the skilful aid of a master, and great assiduity on her own part, we trust that she will one day become a finished ornament of the vocal department of the Stage. At the same time, she should not neglect the study of the qualities of an actress, for the advantage to be derived from the appropriate union of voice and action is immense. Madame VESTRIS as Lilla, looked, acted, and sang delightfully. She was in excellent spirits, and executed her part of the lively duet with the humorous aid of Mr. HARLEY, in such a captivating style as to draw down universal applause and a decisive encore. We remember Madame STORACE's Lilla, but the preference must be given to Madame Vestris's very arch delineation of the part.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Opera of The Lord of the Manor, was performed, night, to a numerous audience. This piece by containing somet of Comedy is very amusing. The only want at this House is male singer of eminence; Mr. PYNE has certainly a sweet voice, he is greatly below the standard of a first rate vocallist. If SINCE who we understand is still in Italy, were at this theatre, wha overpowering strength it would possess in Opera, with Miss STEPH Miss M. TREE, and Miss HALLANDE, &c. However, the defici we have mentioned is very fatal to the full effect of those mu pieces, which absolutely require a nightly distinguished male v Attempts have, at times, been made, to push poor Miss Hall forward as a gentleman singer, but it is only caricaturing such p to place her in them. These endeavours to fill the gap, have found to fail, and therefore, we presume will not be again tempted.

To say that Miss Stephens and Miss M. TREE sang delightf is no more than they usual demand of us whenever they wa Mr. JONES's Young Contrast is a character that he always makes tertaining. This gentleman pleases, whenever he restrains hir to light, airy, rattling parts. They are his line, and when he viates from them he deserves to be applauded only for his submissi- ness to the wishes of the Manager, or for his courage in braving criticks. Mr. LISTON's Moll Floggin should be put down by Ac Parliament, as being a representation dangerous to the lives of Majesty's subjects—a gentleman near us was in convulsions the w time Moll appeared. Trumore was very satisfactorily performed Mr. DURUSET; and Mr. FARLEY's La Nippe was very good.

SHERIDAN's Comedy of The School for Scandal is to be perfor to-night with its former admirable cast. It is a treat worthy of trouble of walking from Whitechapel in wet weather to behold.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE School for Scandal, again drew a splendid audience, who from beginning to end enjoyed it in the highest degree. There are such perpetual strokes of wit in this Comedy that we hardly recover from one before another occurs, and keeps our faculties most delightfully awake. It is full of just satire against many human foibles, but particularly that which originates in the idle circles of life, where family events, and individual conduct, are made subject to the comments of the ill-natured. Sir Benjamin Backbite is just such a person as would suit the Proprietors of the "HUMBUG" GAZETTE, entitled John Bull. When their stock of lampoons and false statements fell short, a Sir Benjamin would renew it by his own malignant invention. We do not know whether the Editor of that amiable Paper resembles Mr. LISTON in his person, but if it happens that he does, we conceive he would be an excellent substitute when that gentleman could not perform the part—he would, we warrant, "give a favorable report" with the same bewitching satanic manner, and "shew up" frailties and mishaps garnished a-la-mode.

Mr. YOUNG in Joseph, improved even on his previous excellence, and acted the character with an air and attention, that marked the man of fashion, whilst the hypocrite was conspicuous.

Mr. FARREN played Sir Peter Teazle, with his accustomed excellence; and Mr. C. KEMBLE gave all the requisite points and finish to the spendthrift Charles. MRS. DAVISON as Lady Teazle, and Miss FOOTE as Maria, acted extremely well. The whole performance met constant smiles and approbation, and closed with universal plaudits.

DRURY LANE.

THE Musical Piece, called Guy Mannering, was acted on Saturday night, when Mr. BRAHAM represented Henry Bertram, being his second appearance here this season. The introduced echo duet with Miss FORDE, did not have the effect we had hoped, but we think that was not Mr. Braham's fault. He executed a ballad, the words of which are by Mr. G. Some, with considerable taste; it had nothing striking in it. "The last words of Marmion," he sung very finely—and "Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled," rivetted the whole audience in silent attention and delight, until the last note gave the opportunity for breaking forth into enthusiastic applause and a general call for its repetition which was complied with.

Miss POVEY as Miss Bertram, sang with great effect, in her opening song—which was encored. Miss FORDE made a sweet-looking Julia Mannering, and sang some portions of her songs very well. We are assured that if this young lady stood in less awe of the audience she would possess more command over her voice. Let her reflect how much disposed every one is to foster the efforts of a young and amiable lady, and she will then only feel surrounded by encouraging friends. We may with great propriety apply this advice to Miss GLOVER, the fair and youthful JULIET, who makes her debut this evening, and who, we are informed, is not seventeen, and has never appeared on any Stage, but has been reared under the able tuition of her mother, who very appropriately plays the Nurse on this occasion.

Mr. HARLEY acted Dominie Sampson for the first time, in a manner that does him the highest credit. He did not represent Mr. Sampson as a buffoon, but a man with good natural feelings, mingled with most eccentric habits and demeanour: he is the best Dominie we have seen.

The House was not badly attended in the Pit and Dress Boxes.

COVENT GARDEN.

Julius Cæsar again attracted a splendid and most numerous audience, on Saturday evening. It was acted in the three great parts of Brutus, Cassius, and Antony, by Messrs. YOUNG, MACREADY, and C. KEMBLE, with equal if not superior effect to that of last Monday's performance. It is a delightful sight to behold a Theatre crowded, not by the mere attraction of a gaudy and childish spectacle, but by a desire to witness the manly exhibition of noble sentiment, language, and action, embodied by three of our most distinguished performers. Let the public continue such support to the intellectual Drama, and they will elevate the reputation of British taste, whilst they recompense the meritorious Managers who aid in its improvements.

COVENT GARDEN.

VIRGINIUS attracted a full, though not a crowded house, last night. Mr. MACREADY in the old Roman father was, as usual, most effective. We have always considered this to be his chef d'œuvre, and our opinion was strengthened by his manner of performing the part on this occasion. In the earlier scenes we thought there were rather too much pomposity and hauteur, in his behaviour to Icilius, (very excellently sustained by Mr. C. KEMBLE,) but in his interviews with Lucius, in the third act, when he is acquainted with the distress of Virginia, to the conclusion of the piece, he was impressive and pathetic to an almost painful degree.

Miss FOOTE is the prettiest heroine in the world; but we owe her a grudge for making the tears run in such torrents down our critical cheeks. We may observe here, by the bye, that the certainty of the fact, that clapping of hands, and rattling of sticks, are no proofs of the delight which an audience feel, was never more fully shewn than in this instance. Their approbation was expressed by their tears and silence, unless when they endeavoured to throw off the oppression of their feelings by a tumult of noisy applause.

DRURY LANE.

LAST night was distinguished by the appearance of Mr. KEAN as Romeo for the first time these five years: and by the debut of Miss P. GLOVER, (daughter of Mrs. Glover) in the character of Juliet.

Mr. KEAN acted the Italian Lover with all the richness and softness that are characteristics of the country. His tones were musical, his action marked by a gentle warmth. We never witnessed a performance of his with such uniform delight. His address to Juliet in the Garden-scene—his distracted feelings at having slain Tybalt the kinsman of his lovely bride—his agony at the intelligence of his banishment—the parting scene—the phrenzied manner in which he receives the news of Juliet's supposed death—his desperation at her tomb—his ecstasy at her revival, and horror at the warning of death that they must separate for ever, were all represented in a style that came home to the heart.

Of Miss GLOVER it is our pleasing duty to say, that she personated the lovely, tender, Juliet, with such sweetness and correctness that her debut must be considered one of the most successful that has occurred for a long period. Miss Glover is of moderate height, with a pleasing form, and agreeable features. Her voice is remarkably like her mother's, which every one knows is susceptible of great softness. Her pronunciation is accurate, and falls on the ear with great distinctness, when she keeps up her voice: which, however, was several times dropped too low, but this is a fault which is common with those who perform for the first time in a large Theatre.

On her first entrance she seemed quite overpowered, but as she was accompanied by her mother, (who judiciously played the Nurse, although not in her proper line of acting) she soon recovered from her agitation, aided by the cheering disposition of the audience. When it is considered that this young lady is not yet seventeen, and had not appeared before the public at any other time, the difficulty and embarrassment of the undertaking must be supposed great. But she has shewn what native talent even in the blossom can effect: and we must anticipate in her riper days, an excellence seldom attained.

It was in the few words she had to deliver at the close of the Masquerade-scene, that she shewed the first proof of talent. But in the garden-scene her delivery of almost every passage was admirable. Much judgment and natural feeling were displayed, and her tones, did, indeed, well prove the truth of “ How silver-sweet sound lovers tongues by night,

Like softest music to attending ears.”

Miss Glover has more difficulty of expressing sudden changes of grief. We would suggest to her, on discovering that Romeo is not dead but banished, to express a fleeting joy at his existence, which must of course, instantly be followed by distraction at his banishment. The parting-scene was sweetly performed. But she was hardly equal to the descriptive imaginings of the horrors of the tomb, she is about to consign herself to.

In the last scene she went through the deeply impassioned parts extremely well, and received, as she had throughout, the most warm applause.

Mr. ESTLINGTON acted Mercutio, we do not rank it amongst his happiest efforts, although he made one or two hits.

The Nurse of Mrs. GLOVER surprised us by its excellence.

The House was brilliantly attended in the Dress Boxes, and the Pit was quite full.

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry should be supported by a valid receipt or invoice. This ensures transparency and allows for easy verification of the data.

In the second section, the author outlines the various methods used to collect and analyze the data. This includes both primary and secondary data collection techniques. The primary data was gathered through direct observation and interviews with key stakeholders. Secondary data was obtained from existing reports and databases.

The analysis phase involved using statistical software to identify trends and correlations within the data. The results show a clear upward trend in the number of transactions over the period studied. This is attributed to several factors, including increased market activity and improved operational efficiency.

Finally, the document concludes with a series of recommendations for future research and implementation. It suggests that further data collection should be conducted over a longer period to confirm the observed trends. Additionally, it recommends the implementation of more robust data security protocols to protect the integrity of the information.

DRURY LANE.

COBE's opera, The Haunted Tower, as miserable a vehicle for music, as ever was manufactured by any play-wright, was represented, last night, to a rather thin audience. It surely cannot be supposed that these wretched dramatic compositions can take any firm hold on public taste, let the music they convey be as delightful as it may. It appears that not even Mr. BRAHAM nor Madame VESTRIS, can render such pieces attractive.

BRAHAM was Lord William, and gave some of his songs with considerable effect; but he did not appear in very excellent spirits, nor was his voice in perfect condition. He sang "Spirit of my sainted sire" in a very inferior manner to what we have heard it from him on former occasions. There is, however, a great defect in this House, when it is not very full, the reverberation of each note is continued upon the succeeding one so as to give an unpleasant flatness to counter-tenor and soprano voices, whilst it improves the effect of those of higher pitch. When there is a crowded audience, the sound is in better condition, and is preferable to that at Covent Garden Theatre, which on the other hand is too little adapted for reverberation, but is on that account well calculated for tenor singing. Mr. Braham's voice is most effective in Drury Lane Theatre, when it is well filled. Its powers, then, are astonishing, equally as to volume, clearness, and precision.

Unfortunately, we entered too late, to hear him sing the new M. S. song, called "Hope," which it seems is composed by Mr. PARRY. Madame VESTRIS as Adela, looked and sang very charmingly. The audience took the opportunity of Mr. GATTIE'S (Baron Oakland) speech where he says—"As to your beauty, that speaks for itself," to compliment her with an applauding confirmation of their being of the same opinion. We did not observe that it was too overcoming; But Madame VESTRIS is accustomed to such attentions, and it cannot be supposed that their frequency can produce much new feeling of delight.

Miss POVEY who is a quiet, little lady, sang with her usual talent in the character of Lady Elinor, but she had enough to do to throw a little saucy manner in the quarrel duet with Adela.

MR. GATTIE was a little too vulgar as the Baron;—but the laughter-loving deities in the upper regions were obliged to him for sundry grins produced amongst them, particularly by his elegant entrée, and stumbling on assuming the chair of state.

MR. HARLEY always has a few friends in the same regions, and somewhat lower, to assist him through his jokes, whether good, bad, or indifferent.

Mrs. BLAND as Cicely, must not be forgot, for she is determined we shall never lose the memory of her melodious pipe. We wish better success to opera at this House in regard to attraction; the absentees ought to have their ears cut off.—BRAHAMS are not to be had in every century.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Opera of Drury Lane was encountered here, last night, by Love in a Village, which it must be confessed is a much more appropriate piece for the eve of May, than The Haunted Tower. At this season, Love is a very fashionable word, and when united with rural ideas, is particularly delightful, now that the blossoms are bursting forth, and the fields look gay. Fond ideas of country enjoyments begin now to re-take possession of the smoke-dried cockney, and like Peter Pastoral, in Teasing Made Easy, he is delighted even at the distant view of dung-hills and pig-styes. Love in a Village! how delicious that sounds!—then the very names of the characters, Meadows, Woodcock, Hawthorn, Hodge, and Rosetta! How rural! But alas! when we come to see the familiar visages of Mr. Chapman, Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Pyne, and Mr. Isaacs, they exhibit so little to maintain the previous pleasing associations of rustic ideas, that they are apt to banish them all except when we revert to the woods, and gardens, and cottages, pictured so beautifully in imitation of nature.

MR. PYNE sang some of the songs of Young Meadows, very respectably. MR. J. ISAACS gets through Hawthorn with no bad effect, but we cannot forget the superior manner in which these parts have been sustained at this Theatre. Miss STEPHENS is always a delightful singer, she gave the songs in Rosetta with very charming effect. MR. EMERY'S Hodge is a lump of nature. The Woodcocks were ably and humourously sustained by Mr. FAWCETT and Mrs. DAVENPORT. The House was rather thin until half-price.

DRURY LANE.

Miss P. GLOVER made her second appearance, last night, as Juliet. It was evident from the whole style of her performance that the interval since her debut, had been industriously employed in studying the parts of the character which her youth and inexperience least qualifies her to fulfill with due effect. That there were improvements in those parts we are happy so state; and we are, therefore, the more convinced that this very young lady has the power of one day becoming a very finished actress. Tutored and protected by her able and experienced mother, it is to be hoped and expected that she will rise rapidly in the profession she has selected, and become a virtuous as well as brilliant ornament to it.

She met with considerable applause throughout, and particularly in the bed-chamber scene, where she gave a much better picture of the horror Juliet feels at consigning herself to the tomb, than she did on the previous occasion. It may be observed of Miss Glover, that she has very uncommon powers for so young an actress, and that all her faults can be easily surmounted by the maturing of time and experience.

Mr. KEAN acted Romeo with great effect in many parts.

The House was not very full, but respectably attended.

We understand a new Musical Drama, written by a Mr. Lynch, and the Music by Mr. Rooke, is in a state of great forwardness. Report says, it has much merit.

---

COVENT GARDEN.

SHE Stoops to Conquer, was acted, last night, to a moderately attended House. Young Marlow by Mr. C. KEMBLE, and Miss Hardcastle by Mrs. CHATTERLEY. Mr. Kemble's performance of the bashful hero was very good, although, we must confess, he appears rather to labour to appear awkward: but in the parts where he is a bold wooer nothing could be easier than his manner. Mrs. Chatterley we cannot fully accept as a substitute for Mrs. Davison in this comedy. She is a pretty, pleasing lady, but she is deficient in many of the sterling requisites. Mrs. Davison shews more mind, which is to those who do not frequent the Theatre merely to criticise faces, a source of superior gratification to what even beauty can convey without it is allied to intellect. Mrs. Chatterley's dress as a Servant was rather too fantastic—rather too gay for the supposed bar-maid, but then it became her, and so we must not quarrel with her taste.

COVENT GARDEN.

THERE is nothing like the legitimate, or if you please the constitutional Theatre after all. We are no Reformers in matters of taste, unless, indeed, when it becomes necessary to adapt "received opinions," to the aspects of the times, and render them conformable to "existing circumstances," and then we wish to be thought Radicals in a high sense of the term. We come away from seeing a production of the old school, and above all from one of our beloved bard's, with much feeling of freshness and delight—with so many warm sensations and pleasing images impressed upon, or renewed in our hearts and minds, that we are half tempted sometimes to wish that modern plays and play-wrights, and Mr. Farley to boot, were only things of imagination, and not of reality: but they are very well in their way too, for all stomachs are not alike, and even people of good digestion cannot always live upon roast beef and plumb-pudding. As for Julius Cæsar, (of which it is now our "hint to speak") it again attracted a full House, last night, and was so admirably embodied in all its parts, that we trust it will be repeated often, in order to give every Theatrical enthusiast an opportunity of witnessing the display of talent which the powerful triumvirate engaged in this piece, never fail to put forth. The quarrel-scene we think is one of the finest specimens of histrionic genius that the Stage at present is capable of producing: there is more room for point and effect, and the immediate feelings of the characters are brought more directly into play than in any other parts of the Tragedy, therefore, it comes with a stronger appeal to the breasts of an audience. Where there is so much to praise, and so little to find fault with, it may appear rather invidious to censure any thing; but there were two or three little matters in the course of the performance which struck us as capable of improvement. Anthony is said on his first appearance, to enter for the course: is the toga the proper costume to be worn on such an occasion? What have the Lictors to do with their fascæ in the field of battle? Could not a more dignified Calphurnia be found than Mrs. Sterling? and an interesting Lucius in the place of the tall boy who now disfigures the part? With best thanks to Mr. YOUNG for his beautiful elocution, and sustained feeling; to Mr. MACREADY for his bursts of energetic passion; and to Mr.

CHARLES KEMBLE for displaying a union of the qualities of both these great actors, though he possesses them in a different degree. We, for the present, take our leave of Julius Cæsar.

To-morrow, the Musical Drama of The Slave. On Monday, Shakespeare's Tragedy of Julius Cæsar. On Tuesday, Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors. On Wednesday, will be revived the Tragedy of King Lear. King Lear, (first time) Mr. Young. Duke of Burgundy, Mr. Norris. Duke of Cornwall, Mr. Jefferies. Duke of Albany, Mr. Connor. Earl of Kent, Mr. Fawcett. Earl of Gloster, Mr. Egerton. Edgar, Mr. C. Kemble, Edmund, Mr. Abbott. Goneril, Miss Love. Regan, Mrs. Faucit. Cordelia, Miss Foote. On Thursday, for the Benefit of Mr. C. Kemble, Shakespeare's Historical Play of King Henry IV. Part II. with the Coronation; and other Entertainments.

A Play, in three acts, (interspersed with Music) called

THE LADY OF JAVA,

Is in rehearsal, and wil speedily be produced.

---

DRURY LANE.

LAST night, was what is called a ticket-night, being for the benefit of several persons of the Theatre. Pizarro was performed with its usual effect, Mr. KEAN being Rolla, Mr. COOPER Alonzo, Mrs. W. WEST, Cora, and Miss EDMISTON, Elvira.

With respect to the latter lady, we have to apologise for not having noticed her representation of Meg Merrilles on last Saturday evening, our space on Monday having curtailed several of our observations. It was a very able performance, partaking of much natural feeling blended with wild enthusiasm. Her Elvira is certainly not equal to some of her characters. as she does not exhibit that commanding manner which is so essential to the part. Elvira should express, on some occasions, more meaning with her eye and attitude, than words can convey.

This Evening Mr. KEAN plays Othello, which is one of his best characters. On Monday he acts Romeo, to Miss GLOVER's Juliet. Mr. BRAHAM appears to-morrow, as The Seraskier, in The Siege of Belgrade.

DRURY LANE.

MR. KEAN's Othello has been often the theme of our praise; and he did not forfeit any portion of his right to equal justice at the critic's hands, for his performance of that character, last night. Of Mr. COOPER's Iago, we regret we cannot speak in high terms. This gentleman possesses many good points; but he has been reared in some wretched school of elocution. He may smile at the advice we are about to give him—but it is sound. At the close of the present season let him find out some judicious teacher, whose ear can regulate the tones of his voice; and let him devote a considerable portion of his time with such aid to getting rid of that unpleasant monotonous sing-song manner he has of terminating poetical sentences. If he would endeavour to govern both voice and action by a close adherence to nature, reason, and good taste, he would soon become a very superior actor. Mr. Cooper, we are sure, will not be angry at remarks aiming to render him service. Mrs. WEST's Desdemona is a very pleasing performance.

The House was tolerably well attended: the Galleries were rather thin.

MR. HARLEY.

This universal favorite, a character which he has attained equally by private worth, and talent in his profession, has a BENEFIT on Wednesday, May 8, at Drury Lane Theatre. His Bill of Fare is highly inviting; but the EDITOR conceives that the greatest pleasure to be derived from attending on the occasion, will result from the consciousness of promoting the interests of one who converts his honorable emoluments to the best purposes of filial and fraternal duty.

---

COVENT GARDEN.

WE enjoyed a musical treat, last night, at this Theatre. The Opera itself, (The Lord of the Manor) is but "a thing of shreds and patches," but it is a vehicle for some delightful singing; and we heard the vocal rivals, (Stephens and Tree) in great perfection. The plaintive melody and arch vivacity of the former lady was finely called forth in the pretty new Scotch Air, "We're a Noddin," and "The Dashing White Serjeant," in both of which she was rapturously encored. "Bid me discourse," and other pieces, received ample justice at the hands of the other Syren. Mr. LISTON's Moll Flaggon, was quite killing as it always is. Mr. JONES's "man of fashion," Young Contrast, is as good as the part deserved;—altogether the piece was strongly cast, and went off well. The House was full.

COVENT GARDEN.

We regret to say that Mr. MACREADY* was so seriously indisposed as to be unable to perform his part of Gambia, in the Slave, on Saturday evening. Hand-bills were posted up in the afternoon intimating the circumstance, and requesting the public kindness for Mr. Connor, who, to prevent the necessity of a change of performance, had consented to undertake the character. Of Mr. Connor's execution of this task, we do not feel called on to pass any serious opinion beyond that of its being marked by a general respectability. Mr. Connor is a gentleman of very versatile talent, but it was not to be expected that he could on a very short notice do himself full justice. The audience, however, rewarded his efforts on several occasions with considerable applause.

The other characters were supported in their usual excellent manner. The House was very well attended.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. BRAHAM delighted a genteel and rather numerous audience, on Saturday evening, as the Seraskier, in The Siege of Belgrade.

This Evening Mr. KEAN plays Lear. He thus affords an opportunity to the public to compare his performance of the unfortunate old King, with that of Mr. YORKE, who is to act it at Covent Garden on Wednesday. Romeo and Juliet, was to have been performed; but the spirit of rivalry has put it aside for the present.

BATH THEATRE.

"We have much pleasure in stating to the Public, that Miss WILSON has by her great practice in Ireland, added considerably to that ease and graceful deportment for which we admired her so much on her former visit. Adela in The Haunted Tower, is well suited to Miss Wilson's powers, and she did ample justice to her author—the character has not been so well sustained since the time of Madame Storace—Mr. HORN played Lord William excellently; and sang "Spirit of my sainted sire," with great effect.—Miss DANCE has been playing a variety of characters with considerable applause."

DRURY LANE.

On Saturday evening, we quitted the House at the end of the Opera, and, therefore, were not aware of a silly disturbance, that took place respecting an alteration of the afterpiece, in consequence it seems of Mr. MUNDEN's unfortunate confinement to the house by the gout. We confess, we saw no placards announcing that event; but that must have been our own oversight. The following account of the affair is from The Times.

"The Farce of Modern Antiques was announced in the bills to follow the Opera of The Siege of Belgrade. But when the curtain rose for the commencement of the afterpiece, Miss Smithson appeared for her usual character in Monsieur Tonson. The audience remained silent until Messrs. Cooper and Barnard made their appearance, when loud hissing, and the usual indication of disapprobation, immediately commenced; upon which Mr. Cooper, coming to the front of the stage, said:—

"Ladies and Gentlemen,—I am totally at a loss to conceive the cause of your displeasure. Have not bills been posted in front of the Theatre, announcing the partial change of character? It is utterly impossible that the Farce of Modern Antiques could be performed without the assistance of Mr. Munden, who is confined to his bed by a sudden attack of the gout.

"A considerable portion of the audience seemed disposed to consider this explanation satisfactorily, but the number of persons who thought differently were still sufficient, by the expression of their dissatisfaction, to convert the performance, which was resumed upon the conclusion of Mr. Cooper's address, into dumb show. After a short interval, therefore, this gentleman came forward a second time, and, as soon as silence was obtained, repeated what he had before said, assuring them, upon his honour, of its truth. He therefore wished to know what they would have him do? (Cries of "Go on.") The performance was then again resumed; but still the noise, now wholly confined to the gallery, continued. After a short time, Mr. Elliston, having been repeatedly called for, came forward, apparently labouring under indisposition, and addressed the House as follows:—

‘The public apology made by Mr. Cooper has been received by the sensible part of the audience. (Great disapprobation.) Is this conduct proper, thus to endeavour to injure the property of the Theatre, without any cause? It is most improper. (Increased confusion, and cries of ‘No reflections.’) I do not mean to cast reflections; but can I prevent the dispensations of Providence? Can I bring Mr. Munden here from his bed of sickness? As soon as it was ascertained that he could not play, it was publicly announced, and a better farce substituted. [A voice in the gallery—“Why make distinctions?”—alluding, we believe, to the exclusion, in consequence of the alteration, of Miss Copeland.] I make no distinctions. I repeat, that a better farce has been substituted. You have already had two apologies for the change; you have now a third; can man do more? However, if this does not satisfy you, leave the house, you who are riotous, and your money shall be returned to you. (Applause.) Has not illness been allowed as a good plea in every Theatre in the world, and will it be denied to me? (No, no.) Is this the fair play I am to expect at the hands of a British audience? No man can tell when a dispensation of Providence may occur; and why, therefore, when it does, should it be necessary for me to come forward? It was by the merest accident that I happened to be here this evening; and would it not have been very hard, had I been away, to have interrupted the performance, because that had taken place which no man could prevent. Gentlemen, press not too heavily upon a fallen man.” (No, no, enough, go on with the performance.)

The humble tone which pervaded the latter part of this address completely succeeded in removing the unfavourable impressions which its inauspicious commencement was calculated to create. The audience recovered their good humour; tranquility was restored; and Monseur Tonson proceeded without further interruption.”

Mr. KEAN’S Lear, in which character he appeared, last night, has many beauties, blended with those defects of manner, which this gentleman cannot always shake off. In all the highly impassioned, and some of the tender parts he becomes absorbed by the feelings he has to express, and gives the representation of them with vivid truth and effect, but where he is left to maintain the character in its more even parts, and make points from nice discriminating elocution, he is not always so happy in being able to wrap up his auditors in the conceptions he is embodying, and make them forget the actor.

DRURY LANE.

THE Opera of The Duenna, was performed, last night. It might be supposed that the comic portion of this work of Sheridan, supported by the names of MUNDEN and KNIGHT, and the musical part by those of BRAHAM, T. COOKE, &c. would have drawn a very full House. In better days we know it would; but now, alas! excellence has lost its due attraction here it would seem. The Dress-Boxes had some elegant company, but they were not full, and every other division of the House was very thinly attended.

The performance was in many parts most admirable. Mr. MUNDEN'S Don Jerome, was very spirited and humorous; altho' "cunning little Isaac" is not exactly in Mr. KNIGHT'S line, he did it with very tolerable effect.

Mr. BRAHAM as Carlos, displayed in a most ample manner the wonderful powers of his voice: all his songs were encored. We confess, however, we did not like his style of executing "Had I a heart for falsehood fram'd." He does not sing it with the delightful simplicity that confers on this song its chief charm. Mr. Braham instead of attending to the character of it, which is in the spirit of tender frankness, embellishes with such profusion that we are lost in his science, and forget the sentiment intended to be conveyed. "Alas! sure a pair," was hardly sung with sufficient playfulness: but "Just like Lore," was delightfully given, and rapturously encored.

Mr. T. COOKE as Antonio, executed his songs with that taste for which he is distinguished. In the duet with Louisa, "Time has not thinned," his part was excellently sustained: and an encore followed.

Miss FORDE sang the songs of Clara with considerable effect. We wish we could communicate to this young lady a little more firmness. She was evidently alarmed at the task of singing "Adieu thou dreary pile," but, notwithstanding, it did her great credit. An encore was very generally called for; but it was opposed by the ignorant idea of being too great an effort to be repeated, and was not persevered in.

Miss CUBITT played the part of Louisa rather too flatly, but she sung very well.

The Duenna was most laughably acted by Mrs. HARLOWE.

The RENTERS, and Ladies and Gentlemen on the FREE LIST of this Theatre are reminded that their good friend Mr. MASSINGHAM, Clerk of the Renters and Subscriber's Office Box Door, has a BENEFIT To-morrow Evening.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Comedy of Errors, with Songs, &c. was played, last night, to a numerous audience. The Dress Boxes, First Circle, and Pit, were quite full. The acting was in general excellent, and the music very delightful.

This Evening, Mr. YOUNG plays King Lear. The tragedy, as now acted, is an alteration by TATE: and although stage effect may thereby be promoted, it is a great injury to its original vigour and beauty. Mr. YOUNG has played Lear in Dublin, with great applause.

COVENT GARDEN.

LAST night, Mr. YOUNG added another wreath to his fame, by the performance of King Lear.

It was his first appearance in this character, before a London audience; and coming in contact with the remembrance of Mr. KEMBLE'S Lear, and with the existing Lear of Mr. KEAN, great curiosity was naturally excited to see him. Mr. Young has been said by those who have witnessed his performance of the aged Monarch at Bath and Dublin, to be deficient in the expression of the stronger emotions that spake the abused Monarch. If so, on those occasions, he has by his representation of last night, greatly redeemed that fault. He plays the character with all the natural bearing of age, never forgetting for an instant, that he is "fourscore and upwards." His manner has much more of Mr. Kemble's than Mr. Kean's in it. He, perhaps, does not make quite so many points as the former, nor astonish us so often as the latter by the force of whirlwind passion, but taking the whole as the delineation of a man whose weight of years may be supposed to check the power of giving an adequate violence to the expression of his roused feelings, yet who has, under the infirmities of age, gleams of a vigorous mind, and spirit-moved occasional returns of bodily strength, Mr. Young's embodying must be considered a masterly effort. He received great applause throughout.

Mr. C. KEMBLE'S Edgar was admirably acted. He ably marked the motives for his assumed madness: and there is only one thing which we think he might improve, namely, the tones of Poor Tom, which should be more contrasted with Edgar's natural voice, for the purposes of concealment.

Mr. FAWCETT'S Kent had much frankness in it, but if he were sometimes to remember in his peasant's garb that he is really an Earl, his performance would be improved.

Miss FOOTE was a most interesting Cordelia.

The Dresses are very absurd. Is it not ridiculous to hear ancient Britons invoking the Gods in the costume of Queen Elizabeth's days?

The House was full in the pit, dress-boxes, and galleries, but the upper-circles were not so well attended.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. HARLEY had a bumper benefit, last night. As Deborah Woodcock, in Love in a Village, he was highly entertaining.

DRURY LANE.

LAST night, was a Ticket-night, that is, the performance was for the Benefit of several persons attached to this Establishment, who issue tickets separately amongst their friends, one half the price of which goes to the Manager to pay expenses, and the other half is for their own advantage. The Play was THE CLANDESTINE MARRIAGE, Lord Ogleby by Mr. W. WEST, the husband of that very pleasing actress Mrs. W. WEST.

This gentleman, although not a member of the Drury Lane Company, nor of any other that we are aware of, once before fell under our criticism for a slight performance in our publisher's shop; but, however incorrectly he played his part on that occasion, we readily forgive it as arising from conjugal regard; and we can assure him that we have no angry recollections to influence the remarks that we feel ourselves compelled to make on his attempt of last night.

A benefit night is one usually devoted to the critic's repose; but on the present occasion, we threw away our night-cap, and resolved to witness the efforts of the new Lord Ogleby. We were inclined to judge leniently for many reasons; and particularly because as Mr. W's. father was one of the sharers in the benefit, it might be supposed that the son with true filial love had sought nothing but to promote his parent's interest by the attraction of his debut. However, we found before Lord Ogleby had got through half of his first scene, that to praise was impossible; and as to flatter it not in our nature, and as to withhold candid criticism, amidst delusive friendly plaudits, would be a breach of duty, we have made up our minds to tell Mr. West, that for the preservation of his good fame in any other calling than that of an actor in which he may be engaged, it is to be hoped he will never again appear on the Stage, at least, as Lord Ogleby. We can assure him that a certain animal in Pidcock's menagerie, which very often walks on its hind legs, might be trained to go through the same graces he displayed, with superior eclat. Mr. West's voice, also, is quite unfit for any male character, unless it be the starved Apothecary in Romeo and Juliet, for as Master Slender says, "he speaks small like a woman." It is with a view to prevent Mr. West being misled by the applause of his polite friends, into a belief of his having histrionic talents, and thus be tempted to seek fame in the haunts of Thalia to his great injury, that we are induced to be thus justly severe.

Mr. WATKINSON plays Sterling more vulgarly than is necessary.

Mr. GATTIE's Canton is an excellent representation of the Swiss of the old school.

Mr. HARLEY is a smart Brush, and dusted Mrs. ORGER's cheek with very valet-like elegance.

Mr. COOPER as Sir J. Melville; and Mr. PENLEY as Lovewell, had enough of the gentleman about them.

The ladies acted their several parts with good effect.

The Dress Boxes, Pit, and Galleries, were well attended.

---

COVENT GARDEN.

A BRILLIANT and crowded audience were assembled here, last night, to grace the benefit of Mr. CHARLES KEMBLE. The Play of Henry the Fourth, got up with great splendour, and represented in its principal characters by some of the most distinguished performers of this establishment, was in itself a great attraction.

Mr. MACREADY played King Henry in excellent style. Mr. FAWCETT was the jolly knight Sir John Falstaff: He throws in a great deal of humor, but it has not the unctuous quality of natural waggery;—the melting of fat wit, that slides mirthfully into favor from a plump, glossy, countenance. Mr. FAWCETT's Falstaff has too many angles: his rotundity does not sit with an easy grace upon him: he does not make us forget the stuffing; and we laugh with the actor rather than with Sir John.

Mr. C. KEMBLE's Prince of Wales has always been an admired representation; and last night we were reminded of all that distinguished it: an easy elegance—a polish amidst low humor; and at length a princely bearing, when called to more serious scenes. The other characters were ably supported by Mr. Emery, Mr. Farren, and Mr. Blanchard; and Mrs. DAVENPORT's Dame Quickly was very good.

The Coronation was very superb.

“ THE DOGE OF VENICE.”

Dramatic Authors who Print and Publish their Plays, can no longer hope to restrain Managers from acting them; for the Court of King's Bench have given it as their opinion that an action cannot be maintained for the representation of Lord Byron's Tragedy of The Doge of Venice.

DRURY LANE.

Mrs. W. WEST appeared last night, as Lady Macbeth, and we regret that she did, because every deviation of an excellent performer from the line of acting which nature and acquirements have limited her to, must be an injury to her fame. Mrs. West is decidedly an actress for the milder passions—she cannot declaim—she cannot assume a daring firmness either in tone or manner with adequate effect, for her voice wants steadiness, and her features are too soft and fair. She has, however, studied the character of Lady Macbeth closely, and, therefore, represented it on the whole in a respectable manner. Occasionally, she delivered some of the passages with much propriety, particularly on the committing of Duncan's murder, and in the chiding of Macbeth in the Banquet-scene: the sleep-walking scene, also, was not badly executed. But we hope she will not be flattered into a supposition, that she is calculated to produce much effect in this line of tragedy: why she has played Lady Macbeth at all, whilst Miss EDMISTON is of the company, we know not. Certain it is, that the latter lady is as much better fitted to act this ferocious part, as Mrs. West is to perform the gentle Cordelia.

Mr. KEAN's Macbeth is in some parts very fine—the whole of the murder-scene; the Banquet-scene; and the Battle-scenes, were admirably performed.

The Dress-Boxes and First Circle were nearly full of genteel company, and the Pit was well attended. The other divisions were very thin.

---

COVENT GARDEN.

Julius Caesar, was acted, last night, to a numerous and elegant audience. The Pit, Dress-Boxes, and Galleries, were crowded. It is delightful to see a classical play of our immortal Bard thus attractive without the aids of spectacle. The acting in the quarrel-scene between Brutus and Cassius was a little languid, and did not elicit, therefore, the usual applause.

This Evening a New Drama, in 3 Acts, appears: it is written by Mr. COLMAN. The Music is by Mr. BISHOP.

COVENT GARDEN.

ON Saturday night, a new Play, interspersed with music, was brought out, under the title of The Law of Java.

It is said to be written by Mr. COLMAN; and, if so, we can only hold up our hands, and turn up our eyes, that the author of Inkle and Yarico, The Heir at Law, The Poor Gentleman, &c. &c. could have been permitted by his friends to obscure his fame by this glimmering of wasted genius. The construction of the whole piece is weak; the dialogue is without uniform pathos in the serious parts, and without wit or pointed humor in the lighter ones: the interest closes before the termination of the first act; and the 'action' of the evident, preconceived, main business, is hung up by scenes of the most uninteresting, common-place, heavy nature.

The Songs given to Miss TREE are most soporific; but Miss STEPHENS has two lively ones which were encored. The audience laughed at the character of a Tourist in LISTON's comical keeping, an idea torn out of "My Pocket-book," and they were very grave at all the rest: but although there was some disapprobation at the close, the applauders carried it.

The following is a detail of the Plot:

The Piece opens with a chorus of soldiers in a Factory of the Dutch East India Company at Java. Major Van Glozen, the commandant, appears in expectation of the arrival from Holland of a nephew, Hans Gayvelt, who has been educated at the Major's expense, and is to be placed as a cadet in the garrison. A letter is received by the Major announcing the young gentleman's approach, and that he has sent forward his servant Pengoose, an Englishman, an honest fellow, but rather too fond of journalising all he sees and hears. Pengoose is introduced, memorandum-book in hand, noting the surrounding novelties. The Major places him on the muster-roll, which Mr. Pengoose does not fail to note in his book, together with the temper and personal appearance of the Major, not forgetting to state that the natives build their houses of bamboo, and queries—"Whether bamboo is not young mahogany?" Young Gayvelt at length arrives, and his uncle is delighted to find him such a fine dashing fellow. The news at home, of course, is desired by the Major, and amongst other questions he enquires how his wife is, whom he left in Amsterdam. Gayvelt appears disconcerted, and looks very melancholy, but at last in the most feeling manner breaks the sad intelligence that Mrs. Van Glozen is no more. The Major, it might be supposed, on hearing this sad news, would be overpowered with grief, and fall senseless into his nephew's arms—but not a feature is changed, not a sigh escapes from his phlegmatic bosom, and all he utters with a tone of happy indifference is—"Dear me!"

The House was crowded.

(To be continued to-morrow.)

DRURY LANE.

Guy Mannering was performed for the second time. Mr. BRAHAM as Henry Bertram, gave his songs with fine effect. Mr. COOPER as Petruchio, in the after-piece, received great applause: as did Mrs. GLOVER in the part of Katherine.—The House was pretty well attended.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Law of Java, was acted, last night, for the second time, with much the same effect as on the first occasion ; and received at the close with moderate applause. The House was crowded in the Pit ; and the other parts were pretty well attended. The Duke of Glo'stér was present : and Mr. and Mrs. C. Kemble were in their private box.

Mr. Young, Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Liston, Mr. Yates, Miss Stephens, and Miss M. Tree, exerted themselves greatly : but the want of a well-regulated interest makes the piece, as a whole, very ineffective. We now give a continuation of the Plot.

The Major now opens to his nephew the prospect before him. He lets him know that he shall have a commission in the service of the Dutch East India Company, whose enlightened policy he has the honor of putting into execution in Java, by keeping the native princes engaged in cutting each other's throats, whilst he extends assistance to that sovereign whose territories are most convenient to the interests of the company. The Emperor of Java at this period happens to be favored with the protection of the Dutch bayonettes, and Dutch counsel ; and the Major promises immediately to introduce his nephew to his Imperial Majesty. But Gayvelt is shocked at the politics of his uncle, and reads him some bold lectures on the cruel system of encouraging the slaughter of his fellow-creatures for the gain of a few plodding dealers in spices at Amsterdam. This the phlegmatic Major is a little angry at, but forgive Gayvelt's freedom on account of his inexperience. They are now summoned to attend the Emperor, to whose chamber of audience we are next introduced, where his dingy Majesty, reclining on his sofa, smokes his hooka, and holds converse with the ladies of his harem, amongst whom are distinguished the beautiful Zaide and Nourjadee. As soon as the women withdraw, the Major and his Nephew enter ; and the latter is introduced by his uncle in due form, with the exception of the proud Mr. Gayvelt's not kissing the hem of his dark Majesty's garments, deeming it an act rather derogatory to the dignity of a Dutchman. The Emperor, however, does not appear offended at his want of etiquette, but receives him very condescendingly in the most gracious manner. The Major has just concluded some advice to the Emperor on the best manner of defending himself from "that little fighting cock," the King of Bantam, when intelligence is brought that a man has been taken who had privately entered the Harem. He is brought in, and questioned: his name, he answers, is Parbaya, a native of Macassar, whose dwelling had been entered by Pirates, that murdered his infant child, and forced away his beloved wife. He has traced her ravisher, and sees him in the person of The Emperor of Java. Zaide is she who was torn from his bosom; and to behold whom he ventured within the precincts of the Harem, for doing which, he knows the penalty is death. The Emperor to make some shew of mercy, is so kind as not to order him to the bow-string, but merely sentences him to gather poison from the fatal Upas tree, from within the influence of which scarcely any of the numerous criminals sent on a similar errand, come forth. Parbaya is now committed to the custody of Dutch guards, commanded by young Gayvelt, whose generous feelings are deeply interested in the fate of the unhappy man.

Mr. Pengoose at the opening of the second act is found on guard the prison door of Parbaya, and amuses us with his military awkwardness, and his note livres and mems, until the Major appears to see his nephew, who is within consoling the prisoner. The commandant chides the cadet for his humanity and want of Dutch policy, and then goes off to execute some orders of the Emperor respecting Zaide, but Gayvelt, not affected by his uncle's lessons, affords his prisoner the means of shooting an arrow, bearing a letter, into Zaide's prison window.

DRURY LANE.

Hamlet, was the performance, last night; and the novelty of the evening, was Miss P. GLOVER's Ophelia, for the first time. A shameful uproar in the one shilling gallery, almost prevented our hearing many parts of the play, and particularly the mad-scene of Ophelia, which, however, Miss Glover got through very well. At the close of the tragedy, Mr. Cooper came forward to state, that Madame VESTRIS was so indisposed that she could not appear in the afterpiece as Don Giovanni, but that Miss CUBITT would undertake it, which she did with very tolerable effect. At the close of the first act of Giovanni in London, Mr. Cooper again appeared to address the audience, and informed them, that Mr. ELLISTON had just been honored with a communication from the King, stating that he would visit this Theatre on Wednesday evening. Great applause followed this announcement.

The house was not badly attended.

MR. MATHEWS.

We regret that our entertaining friend was yesterday seized with a hoarseness which compelled him to postpone his At Home until Thursday.

DRURY LANE.

HIS MAJESTY, this Evening, honors this Theatre with his presence.

To see the CHIEF of our Country; the FRIEND of our interests; become a COMPANION in our amusements, is in pleasing accordance with the best feelings of civilized society. The Monarch on such an occasion, is appreciated as the Man; and we forget the established distance between Subject and Sovereign, to feel the affinity of human nature in every station; whilst we congratulate ourselves that the highest is capable of sharing in the happy sentiment of the lowest. We cannot imagine a greater gratification to a beneficent Monarch, than to sit in company with his People, whom he loves and cherishes, welcomed by their smiles, and respected by every decorous observance.

NOTWITHSTANDING there were, last night, the delightful Opera of Love in a Village, with BRAHAM, MUNDEN, &c. in it, and O'Keefe's pleasant Farce of The Farmer, the House was extremely thin. The singing and acting were excellent. Where was Taste?—Not at Covent Garden, unless dragged there by Curiosity.

COVENT GARDEN.

The House was crowded, last night, in all parts to see The Law of Java, and Cherry and Fair Star. The former new piece goes on as before—not offending, but not producing enthusiastic applause as a whole. Her R. H. Princess Augusta was in the King's box.

(The Plot of "The Law of Java," continued from yesterday.)

The next scene is the anti-chamber of the fair sufferer's place of confinement, and here we are entertained with a love-scene and a pretty song, Miss Nourjadee and Captain Agib, having a penchant for each other. At length we reach the apartment of Zaide. Nourjadee comforts her; the arrow and letter arrive; and presently the Major enters and addresses Nourjadee, supposing her to be the prisoner. She favors the blunder, and sees Zaide turned out, and herself left in the custody of her dear Captain Agib. Parbaya is now cheered by Gayvelt, with the hope of seeing his wife before he sets out for the Upas ;—but Gayvelt feels constrained to inform him of a new determination of the Emperor, namely, that should Parbaya bring away the poison, Zaide must swallow it. The unhappy man on hearing this, is plunged in new grief ; but recovers his firmness, and resolves never to return, but to perish within the pestilential region. Zaide now enters, and a tender parting ensues—she is carried away insensible, and her husband is marched off for his destination. The last scene of this act is got up to afford time for the preparation of the first one of the succeeding act ; and consists of the singing of Noujadede, Zaide, Baspa the eunuch, Agib, and a posse of women and attendants, who chaunt the subject of Zaide's re-committal to her dungeon.

The last act opens with a view of the blasted country around the fatal Upas. A cottage stands in front, before which is seated Orzinga, the Mahometan Priest, whose duty it is to prepare the criminals of the Upas for the dangers of their journey. He is rather a misanthrope it appears, and labours under some hidden grief. Pengoose, who has preceded the guard attending Parbaya, in order to see the country and mem its productions and appearance, arrives at Orzinga's station, of which he has been informed, and busies himself with wise and facetious remarks on the Priest, whom he styles the Rev. Mr. Orzinga, Rector of the Parish of Upas ; and compares him with the Ordinary of Newgate : and minutes down even the hairs on his chin, which he queries—“ Whether Mr. Orzinga does not shave, or whether this is near his usual shaving time.” Mr. Pengoose at length pulls out a bottle of geneva, with which he goes into Orzinga's hut to refresh himself ; and in the mean time the prisoner arrives, and is left to the preparations of the Priest. Here an extraordinary discovery takes place—Orzinga proves the long-lost father of Parbaya : in the midst of their temporary joy, Gayvelt appears, and informs Parbaya that the Emperor having been again rejected by Zaide, he had condemned her to death. The intention of Parbaya to yield himself a willing victim to the Upas, is now changed for an ardent desire to live to save or avenge his Zaide. At this moment a criminal appears returning with the poison—he staggers, and dies—Parbaya rushes to the spot, seizes the vase of poison ; and then hastens with his father towards the Emperor's palace.

DRURY LANE.

THE KING, escorted by a squadron of Oxford Blues, and accompanied by the Duke of York, and the Great Officers of State, arrived at this Theatre, last night, exactly at seven o'clock, and shortly after entered the Royal Box, which was tastefully fitted up for the occasion. The House was crowded to the ceiling, and, on his Majesty's appearance, one general shout of welcome resounded for a considerable time, and the whole of the performers of the establishment came forward with Mr. Elliston at their head, and sang "God save the King," which was encored with much enthusiasm.

The Opera of The Siege of Belgrade, was then commenced, and Mr. BRAHAM as The Seraskier, executed his songs in the most masterly style, particularly "My heart with love is beating," which was encored. Miss FORDE exerted herself with great effect, and was encored in "Descend bright Victory!" Madame VESTRIS, also, acted and sang most delightfully, and all exerted themselves greatly. At the delivery by Mr. COOPER of Cohenberg's speech to the Seraskier—

"Thy threats I boldly here despise: thy offers thus I tread beneath my feet; and tho' this worthless frame may fall before thee, fix'd as the founded rock my soul shall stand, firm to my God, my Country, and my King."

The applause was deafening. At the conclusion of the Opera God save the King, was again sung, and some foolish people attempted an encore; but the performers had the good sense at once to gratify the spirit of the audience and avoid the tiresome repetition, by singing "Rule Britannia."

The Farce of Monsieur Tonson followed, which seemed to amuse the royal visitors, and at the close "God save the King" was again sung, and his Majesty then retired, amidst farewell cheers. It was a delightful sight to see the fronts of the Boxes lined by the most lovely females elegantly dressed, and to observe the general pleasure felt on the occasion. The King looked well, and acknowledged with much feeling in his manner, the testimonies of personal regard shewn him.

The Plot of "The Law of Java." concluded.

There, the forlorn Zaide is about to be sacrificed by the arrows of the tyrant's guard, when Parbaya, followed by Gayvelt, &c. rushes in and interposes, threatening instant death to all present by scattering the poison, unless they desist. The Emperor is still determined on his vengeance, when Orzinga appears bearing a volume of the antient laws of Java, by one of which he shews that, he who succeeds in bringing away the poison of the Upas, shall be at liberty to chuse any reasonable reward, and which the Monarch must grant, or forfeit his crown.—Parbaya on this, flies to his Zaide, chusing her as the greatest good he can desire on earth. The Emperor submits, and retires; and the loves of the late unfortunates no longer interfering with the policy of the representative of the Dutch East India Company, all are happy and satisfied!—and so much for "The Law of Java;" which we verily believe will become obsolete before next season.

COVENT GARDEN.

This Theatre has its turn of Royal distinction to-night: THE KING goes to see The Law of Java, with Cherry and Fair Star.

The Law of Java, was acted, last night. We have hardly had an opportunity of speaking of the manner in which this piece is performed; but we are not too late in executing that task.

Mr. YOUNG's undertaking the representation of such a part as that of Parbaya, must be considered complimentary to Mr. COLMAN, who has on this occasion much need of the good-natured aid of his friends.

Parbaya is no character; he is merely a man labouring under a misfortune; and who bears such love for a faithful wife, that he holds her dearer than his existence. In the cause of this solitary feeling is Mr. Young enlisted; and we must own he does his duty with truth and judgment. The scene where he parts with Zaide in the prison, is very pathetic, and he is admirably supported by Miss M. TREE. The other scene which is at all worthy of his talents, is that in the last act where he discovers his father, and also learns that Zaide's death is certain. After expressing extreme agitation at the latter intelligence, he suddenly seems to force his mind from its distraction, and utters "Good God! I believe I am mad!" in a tone of reality, that electrifies every one with the idea that he had actually stretched imagination to the borders of reason, and with difficulty called in his scattered senses. Great applause always follows this display of his art.

Mr. LIXTON's Pengeose, is laughable from the very aspect and dress he assumes. He has nothing very humorous to deliver; but he has only to look stupidly wise, and fix his eye on some one in the pit, with his mouth open, and he does the business of comicality without a scratch of an author's pen. In short, if the most of the words put into his mouth, were put into that of any other performer, they would be hissed for their stupidity.

Mr. JONES as the good-natured Gayell is almost out of his proper place; and Mr. DURSET as Agib; and Mr. ABBOTT as The Emperor, are mere figures. But the two Syrens, STEPHENS and TREE, are main props of the weaker scenes. The lively songs of the former, and her naivete of acting are very delightful; whilst the talent of the latter is very conspicuous in the serious department; but her songs are too long and elaborate.

DRURY LANE.

A New Way to Pay Old Debts, is a very agreeable comedy; and if represented in all its chief parts by able performers, is doubly delightful. But we cannot say this was the case, last night. Neither Lord Lovell, nor Welborn, were satisfactorily supported. Mr. COOPER's Welborn, wants the buoyancy of manner necessary to the character. He has a dead-weight about him that sinks his efforts in light and airy parts; and we fear prevents his ever rising in the element of gaiety.

Mr. KEAN acted Sir Giles Overreach for the last time this season. He is unequalled in it by any one within memory. He displays the hateful character with a sarcastic malignancy and force it, perhaps, never before had conferred on it—the last ebullition of passionate disappointment is terrific.

Mr. GATTIE is not a bad Justice Greedy; and Mr. MUNDEN's Marrall is very entertaining.

The Dress-Boxes were well attended; but the other parts were very thin.

---

Mr. JOHN JOHNSTONE and Mr. DOWTON have kindly volunteered to perform in JOHN BULL to-morrow, for the Benefit of the suffering Irish: the former as Dennis Brulgruddery, and the latter as Job Thornberry.

---

MR. MATHEWS.—LYCEUM.

This gentleman, last night, had a crowded and elegant audience. He was greeted in a friendly manner on his first appearance after his indisposition: and went through his arduous task with all his usual vivacity and pleasantry.

COVENT GARDEN.

At seven o'clock exactly, the King, and the Duke of York, with the Officers of State, escorted by a squadron of the horse guards, arrived at this Theatre, and were received by Mr. CHARLES KEMBLE, Mr. FAWCETT, &c. in full court-dresses, and conducted to the Royal Box. As soon as they came forward, the cheers of the whole audience shook the very walls, and the entire Corps de Theatre, headed by Mr. Fawcett, advanced, and sung "God Save the King," which was repeated by general command. The play of "The Law of Java" then commenced, and received marked attention from the Royal visitors. The King joined, by clapping his hands, in an encore of Miss Stephen's first song, and also of the duet between that young lady and Miss M. Tree, with whose acting and singing he appeared much pleased. LISTON as Pengoose, moved the Royal muscles in common with every risible phiz in the house. The audience did not neglect to notice any passages that admitted of a display of loyal or patriotic feeling—such as Pengoose's speech—"There's nothing like old England after all, where criminals are tried by sound laws, and often pardoned by Sovereign mercy." And, when Gaynell says—"Let those evil advisers of their sovereign consider in wronging him how much they abuse themselves." there was marked applause. "God Save the King," and "Rule Britannia," were sung at the end of the Play.

The King and his brother seemed gratified with the splendour of Cherry and Fair Star; and after "God Save the King" was again sung, they rose and departed: it being then nearly half past twelve o'clock. The House was crowded.

DRURY LANE.

This House was last night well attended, except in the galleries: The Comedy of Town and Country, with Giovanni in London were the performances. Mr. KEAN as Reuben Glenroy, in the first piece, gave an animated picture of that none-such character.

In the Extravaganza, MADAME VESTRIS was, as usual, a highly attractive representative of Don Giovanni.

This Evening there is a great treat in the temporary appearance of Mr. JOHN JOHNSTONE and Mr. DOWTON in two old favorite characters: and when the humane motive of their coming forward is considered, the Public will doubly appreciate their exertions. Mr. ELLISTON is also entitled to great praise for leading the way in devoting his theatre to the relief of Distress, which every Englishman must desire to alleviate. Our mite (this day's Profits of The Theatrical Observer) is appropriated to the same object: and happy are we to find that other branches of the public press are aiding in the cause.

DRURY LANE.

On Saturday evening, the Comedy of John Bull, with a Concert, and Two Strings to your Bow, were performed here, the Profits of the night being intended to aid the Fund for the relief of the distressed Irish.

We sincerely regret to say that little or nothing has been produced by this praise-worthy endeavour of Mr. ELLISTON, as the House was very indifferently attended.

On this occasion Mr. JOHN JOHNSTONE, who has long retired from the Stage, contributed, on behalf of his unfortunate countrymen, the attractions of his Dennis Brulgruddery. Nothing could exceed the warmth of his reception by the audience, who cheered his entré with friendly shouts, and on his final withdrawing, continued their farewell plaudits for a long time. We were happy to see him look so well, and act with so much of his old spirit and humour. Mr. DOWTON, also, who has been a stranger to the London boards for a considerable period, gave his able assistance on the occasion, as Job Thornberry, a character in which he was always admired. He met with a most friendly reception; and conferred on the distressed but warm-hearted tradesman, the most natural touches. The other performers exerted themselves with good effect. Mr. COOPER was impressive as Peregrine; Mr. RUSSELL, who re-appeared to aid the generous cause, enacted Tom Shuffleton, very well. And Mrs. W. WEST's Mary Thornberry was highly interesting.

In the Concert, there were many delightful songs; and Signor AMBROGETTI lent his powerful talents on the occasion.

The result of these excellent endeavours to render amusement tributary to Charity, is to be lamented. As to the cause of the House not being better attended, it is hardly possible to speak. Probably, the public would prefer subscribing their money without taking any thing in return for it, as being the least dubious way of accounting with their own feelings. We know, that the devotion of the profits of our Saturday's number to the Irish Fund, made an alteration for the worse in our day's sale.

COVENT GARDEN.

There was a tolerable House, on Saturday evening. The Law of Java, with Cherry and Fair Star, were the performances.

Mr. MATHEWS.—This gentleman is charged with robbing Mr. JOHN BULL of a smile. The consequence is that the culprit thinking HOME will be too hot for him, is about to transport himself to America.

COVENT GARDEN.

THERE was a very good house, last night. The Law of Java, met with that moderate applause which its general character alone merits. Mr. CHAPMAN is elevated to the Javanese throne, vice Mr. ABBOTT. The new sovereign does not wag his foot with the dignity of the late one; and he has the advantage of being more worthy the detestation of the ladies of his harem in all other respects. Really, the last scene of this piece is very absurd—an Emperor is bullied to his face, and the whole of the persons round his throne turn their backs on him, when he struts out with his half-dozen archers, leaving the remainder of the party to sing and be merry in his audience chamber! We confess we have not agreed with some of the daily Journals, nor with that amiable paper The John Bull, in our opinion of The Law of Java; for we are not inclined to suppress our real sentiments to flatter any man, however much we have admired his general talents. This piece, every time we see it, makes us melancholy, for we are thereby reminded of the decay incident to human nature, and led to apply the observation to the author. If Mr. COLMAN does not redeem his dramatic credit by presenting us with a regular play that may be placed near his Poor Gentleman, or his Heir at Law, &c. we must presume his wit to be defunct, and only look for the epitaph recording its existence.

It is said that the KING when he visited this theatre, last week, apologised to Mr. FAWCETT for having gone to Drury Lane theatre on his benefit night, by which he feared he had done him an injury. We have not learnt Mr. Fawcett's reply; but we believe he was able to give a very satisfactory one to his Majesty.

Mr. YOUNG takes his BENEFIT to-night. The annexed play-bill of Covent Garden will speak for the evening's attractions: but we may be allowed to say, that if a gentleman, a scholar, a man of superior intellect, an eminent tragedian, merits the substantial attentions of the public, then so does Mr. Young.

DRURY LANE.

LAST night, Mr. COOPER and Mr. KNIGHT took their joint benefit at this House. The chief attraction of the evening, was Mr. KEAN's personation of CARDINAL WOLSEY in "Henry the Eighth." This was a character Mr. KEMBLE gave great dignity and interest to; but it appears to us that it does not lie in Mr. KEAN's power to give it the same effect. He marks the part with great talent on various occasions, but the imagination will not fully accept him as the lofty Wolsey, it has pictured over the closet perusal of the play. The House was brilliantly attended.

COVENT GARDEN.

Mr. YOUNG, last night, had a splendid benefit. The number of the audience, and the elegance that the Boxes displayed, together with the admirable performances of the evening, rendered the whole entertainment of a very superior nature.

The Tragedy of King John is somewhat heavy, and nothing but excellent acting renders it fit for representation. Mr. YOUNG gave to the King a striking effect, by the energy he put forth. Mr. MACREADY conferred on Hubert a high degree of interest. It is somewhat beneath the level of his powers, but what will not one friend do for another? This generous disregard of due station, when a humbler walk than merit claims can be beneficial to a brother, is very pleasing to behold.

Mr. C. KEMBLE played Faulconbridge with great spirit. The rest of the characters were ably filled, and the tragedy altogether went off with eclat.

In the Opera of Inkle and Yarico, which followed, there was much to admire: but chiefly the novelty of Mr. Young, one of our first-rate tragedians, in the part of Inkle, and also singing the duetto of "O say simple Maid," with Miss M. TREE as Yarico. He made Inkle interesting—the song was very pleasingly executed: Mr. Young has not much compass of voice; but there is great sweetness of tone in it. Miss Tree acted and sang most delightfully: this aimable young lady, the general favorite of the green room, rises in public opinion every time she appears. Her manner is gentle and modest—in her acting she glides into our good graces imperceptibly; and in her singing there is nothing boisterous, but, zephyr-like, she delights by soft undulations, that vibrate on the ear fraught with enchanting melody. The music of her voice conveys the same sort of feeling that we have when we hear, the distant murmur of the bee amidst sun-beams and flowers. We always, therefore, regret when she attempts bravura. This is no better than the invasion of the drum and trumpet on the sweet music of the groves.

Miss STEPHENS permitted herself to be blacked as Wowski, and she would, no doubt, have played the part with her usual navité and spirit, but she was evidently unwell; which was proved by Mr. LISTON addressing the audience to state her indisposition as an apology for her inability to do justice to the character. This gentleman who acted Trudge with infinite humor, set the house in a roar of laughter at the conclusion, by kissing Wowski so as to bring away an impression of her black cheek.

DRURY LANE.

Miss TIDSWELL who has been for forty years on the Stage, and whose chamber-maids and old-women, were excellent, last night had a farewell BENEFIT. Mr. KEAN, with that kindness which he equally shews to all of his sisters and brethren of the stage, contributed the attraction of his performing Don Felix in The Wonder. He represented the character with all its varied feeling, in an admirable manner.

LYCEUM.

MR. MATHEWS'S extra-night, AT HOME, yesterday evening, intended for the express purpose of adding to the fund raising to relieve the distressed people in Ireland, was, we most sincerely regret to say, not entirely crowned with the hoped-for success. When he came to the Irish part of his adventures he took occasion to address the audience as follows:—

“ While I am upon the subject of Ireland, I must be under the necessity of regretting that the humble endeavour in giving my entertainment in aid of the liberal subscriptions for the distressed peasantry of that country, should not have proved to MY FEELING—quite successful.

“ I wish there had been a fuller audience than I had ever seen on my nights AT HOME: I should have sincerely desired that it had been the best night, instead of the worst during the many evenings I have had the honor of making you merry here.

“ I am convinced that the public will take the will for the deed:— and it gives me some gratification, that though the numbers of the audience have unfortunately decreased, the laughter has not been diminished in proportion.”

DRURY LANE.

King Henry the Eighth was acted here, last night, for the second time, with Mr. KEAN as Wolsey.

This Play is not well calculated for representation—it proceeds too solemnly and stately for stage effect. Henry, certainly, has his bursts that variegate the action a little, but all the other characters are only to be fully appreciated, and their speeches enjoyed, by perusal. Even the proud Cardinal Wolsey makes but a poor figure in the living scene, represented as he may be. But to make any figure at all requires very peculiar qualities and powers in his representative. That Mr. KEAN does not possess all the requisites to give full effect to this character is undoubted. The want of a commanding person, is, however, his chief defect. In most of the other points he has ample means of excelling. His tones, which have too often in other characters a methodical expression, are here frequently in place—particularly in his reflective speeches after his downfall. He delivers with affecting emphasis the famous one terminating with—

—————O Cromwell, Cromwell,
Had I but served my God with half the zeal
I served my king, he would not in mine age,
Have left me naked to mine enemies."

On the whole, Mr. KEAN in this part, fully maintains his high reputation.

Mr. POPE's Henry is quite over-acted in some instances—Although the monarch was hasty and passionate, and arbitrary, yet these should be put under some controul: notwithstanding, in several instances he represented the hot king excellently. We are happy at the opportunity of commending Mr. THOMPSON, who, as Buckingham, surprised us by a more chastened and correct style of delivery than we have ever before heard from him, and he accordingly had some applause. Mrs. WEST's Katharine was very respectable; particularly in the interview with Cromwell, where she learns Wolsey's death, and gives his character.

The Duchess of Glo'ster, and the Princess Augusta were present.

The House was poorly attended.

DRURY LANE.

The performances of The Busy Body, and Paul and Virginia, last night, were for the Benefit of several persons of this establishment. Both pieces were excellently performed, although we still think that if Mr. HARLEY would mix a little more of the air of the fine gentleman in his delineation of Marplot, it would be an improvement. Paul and Virginia, is a delightful entertainment.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Law of Jura, proceeds in the same manner, drawing moderate houses, and moderate applause.

MISS STEPHENS.

It was on the 7th of January this amiable young lady made her first appearance this season. She on that occasion represented Polly in The Beggars' Opera, to a most numerous audience, who received her with that warm applause which her private character and delightful talents ever create. Since the above date Miss Stephens has performed fifty nights: and, on the present evening, takes her BENEFIT, which affords an opportunity of not only hearing her in many most favorite songs, but to see her act with that agreeable liveliness which has as much elevated her above many other vocallists as her sweet notes.

MONS. ALEXANDRE, the Ventriloquist.

As it is our wish to furnish our readers with an abstract and brief chronicle of all Theatrical proceedings, we ought to apologise to them for omitting to notice the performances of this ingenious young Frenchman from time to time. He richly deserves every praise and recommendation which we can bestow upon him, and we are glad to find that his unique qualifications as a Ventriloquist, have acquired a corresponding degree of popularity for him. His powers in this way are indeed of so high an order, that we think we may pronounce him, in the present day, to be without a rival or competitor. Mons. Alexandre may lay claim to much originality in the manner in which he brings the extraordinary powers of voice which he possesses into practice, so as to keep an audience in a state of continual excitement for nearly three hours. This he does by very palpable but uncommon means, and we think every play-goer should pay him a visit, as he undoubtedly forms a link in the chain of theatricals.

List of the Songs sung in Miss Stephens's Concert

Song, Miss Hallande, " From other minds."

Song, Miss Hallande, " Blow ye gentle gales."

Song, Miss Hallande, " With love my heart."

Song, Miss Stephens, " Far from his native."

Song, Miss Stephens, " Tell me have ye."

Savoyard Duet, Miss Stephens and Miss Hallande, " From distant lands."

Song, Miss Stephens, " Peace inviting"

Song, Miss Hallande, " Ye little birds."

Echo Duet, from Zuma, Miss Stephens and Miss Hallande.

Miss Stephens (by particular desire) will introduce " We're a Noddia"
—the celebrated Echo Song—and Auld Robin Gray.

Miss M. Tree—" Bid me discourse."

Mr. Sapio, " Said a smile to a tear." accompanied by himself on the

COVENT GARDEN.

LAST night, Miss STEPHENS had a brilliant Benefit. The House at first price was nearly full, and at half price it was quite so. Don John, with a Concert, and the Romance of Cymon were the performances.

In the first piece Mr. C. KEMBLE acted gay Don John with uncommon spirit. We admired his skill in nursing the little foundling; but he has had good practice at home with his own pretty ones, which accounts for his talent this way. He rallied his friend Frederick with infinite pleasantry of manner; and kissed his landlady with such violent humor, that poor Mrs. DAVENPORT's cheeks, we fear, suffered for it. Then for fighting, or peeping, or loving, he never had his equal. He tickled Fractioso with his cold iron in an amusing style, until Mr. LISTON, the representative of that worthy, was almost in fits, and thence the audience were almost in the same condition by his ludicrous appearance. The quarrelsome old fellow was very entertaining throughout; but he would have been more so if Mr. LISTON had not had a hoarseness.

The Musical part of this agreeable Opera is very delightful, Miss HALLANDE who has not been much before the public of late, appeared in her old character the First Violetta, she sang and acted very well. When Miss STEPHENS made her appearance, she was greeted with long continued applause, and gave her songs with that taste, execution, and pleasing expression, for which she is so distinguished. Many were inclined to encore several of her as well as Miss Hallande's songs, but the fear of fatiguing too much suppressed the desire.

In the Concert, there were many delightful delightful pieces, amongst which we may name, the "Echo Duet" by Miss Stephens and Miss Hallande—"We're a noddin," the "Echo Song," by Miss Stephens—"Bid me discourse," by Miss M. Tree—and above all, "Cease your fussing" with new variations by Mrs. Salmon. This last song was given in a style of rich melody, and astonishingly varied execution, of which it exceeds the power of description to convey a just idea. It was encored with enthusiasm. The little playful "Giovenette" by Signor Angrisani and Miss Stephens, was encored twice.

MR. HARRIS OF COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

It is with great surprise and regret we have heard that this gentleman has been missing for some time. On quitting Dublin on the 16th ulto. where he went to visit his Theatrical concern, he came to England, and had arrived at Birmingham, where it seems he was taken ill. But from that period his relatives have heard no more of him; and have found it necessary to resort to public advertisements to discover where he is, or if deceased, to learn the place and manner of his death. We most sincerely trust that one who has endeared himself to so many, has not, in almost the flower of life, been plucked from his friends for ever. A little time, no doubt, will clear up the mystery of his absence; which may have been caused by one of those events, that only produce a smile. Mr. Harris's excursive habits may, possibly, have put him for a short time out of the immediate reach of his friends' correspondence.

Whitsun-eve suspended the performances of the Drama at Covent Garden and Drury Lane Theatres, but a Selection of Music was given by Mr. Bochsa at the former house, which was fully attended, and well received.

In the absence of the more immediate objects of our usual notice, we shall refer to other boards.

BIRMINGHAM.

"OUR THEATRE opened for the season on Monday, May 20th, with the comedy of The Rivals, which was acted throughout in the very first style of excellence, and met with great applause. The names of Messrs. Wrench, Oxberry, Buller, Mads, Mr. Power, (from the English Opera House) and also of Miss Lydia Kelly, Mrs. Weylett, and our distinguished favorite, Mrs. Bunn, are sufficient to show the talent we possess.

The announcement of Tom and Jerry, has created great interest in our dramatic circles."

BATH.

The success of Miss DANCE has occasioned some party-spirit between her admirers, and those of Miss JARMAN, who has for some time been the reigning favorite, until Miss D. appeared. Miss Jarman is going to Dublin we believe; and we have heard that it is not unlikely we shall see her at Covent Garden in the course of next season. She is about eighteen; not beautiful, but with pleasing and striking features unites a perfect knowledge of the Stage, to which she has been familiar from childhood:

COVENT GARDEN.

Julius Cæsar, last night, was attended by a crowded Pit ; but the boxes were rather thinly occupied. The gallery company was pretty numerous. The excellent manner in which this Tragedy is represented in its chief parts, was as amply recognised from all quarters of the house as on the previous occasions of its performance. We get quite proud of a British audience when we find it enduring the effects of a squeeze on the verge of summer, for the sake of seeing a good play ; and we swell with patriotic delight to see the exertions of the groundlings to force a way for the free use of their hands to give proofs of their taste for Shakspeare's beauties, and for admirable acting. This is something better for foreigners to behold, than to see Mr. and Mrs. Bull's vehement eagerness to get a peep at Cleopatra's Galley borne over a canvass ocean, or to gaze at the seasons in person, trundled over the Stage in shew-cars. We mean no offence to Mr FARLEY, whose talent for Spectacle arrangements is so great, when we declare we believe him to be the greatest thorn in the side of genius that ever took root in Covent Garden. If he had not existed, it may be pretty certainly guessed that the Managers must, throughout a large portion of the season, have depended on Plays that possessed sufficient merit in the dialogue and action to induce people of sense to resort to the Theatre.

The change of management has in some measure lessened the influence of mere Show ; and Mr. Farley is not quite so much in demand. At although not possessed of such talent as at Covent Garden, in the getting up of tales of enchantment, and emblematical pictures and machinery, yet they contrived to manage the procession of the Coronation very well : But here no invention was required, as the manner of doing the thing was furnished by the Herald's college. However, when Drury was thrown on its own resources, it failed in its spectacle pieces; and was compelled to rely on mere Tragedy, and Comedy, and Farce. We are told that their weakness at this Theatre in the Shew department, is about to be remedied by a junction with that great producer of things to please the eye, and dumb-found the senses, Mr. GLOSSOP. If so, we shall expect that the next season of Drury Lane will prove as unsuccessful as the present one, and with this difference, that it will better deserve neglect than it has latterly. If it is to become a great Minor Theatre, it shall have our decided opposition, as it will that of every friend of the Stage. Were the conductors of our two national Theatres to unite in principle, and agree that they would, as to first pieces, wholly rely on the regular Drama, for, at least, three-fourths of a season, the character of the British Stage would not be so sadly furnished as it has been; and there would be some probability of distinguished Dramatists appearing to add to its lustre.

MR. KEAN acted Richard the Third, yesterday evening, for the last time this season. It is throughout a distinguished piece of acting, and met with all its usual approbation.

MR. MACREADY'S BENEFIT TO-NIGHT.

Every one who has seen Mr. MACREADY in his principal characters, must be deeply impressed with his eminent talents. His appearance, therefore, this evening, in the character of Othello, will, independent of the natural inclination of the British public to foster histrionic genius, lead many to witness his effort, and Mr. Young's as Iago, as well as to gratify their curiosity as to Mr. M's. performance of Count Almariva, in the Entertainment.

COVENT GARDEN.

WE were extremely gratified, last night, with Mr. MACREADY'S performance of Othello, and Count Almariva, for his Benefit. The play-goers have been so much accustomed to see this gentleman in parts entirely beneath his talents, the Gambian's, Rob Roy's, and some similar productions of the modern Drama, in which he has only to spout a certain portion of sickly bombast, which passes for sentiment and feeling, that they would be in some danger of forgetting that he was fitted for better things, had they not an opportunity on such occasions as this of witnessing a full display of his powers. There can be no doubt that he possesses the mind and physical attributes of a great actor. His delineation of the Moor was vigorous and effective, in a very high degree. We cannot attempt to particularise the various lights and shades of the character in which his felicity of conception and execution were most conspicuous, or point out the different passages of the dialogue, which he gave with the greatest effect, and must content ourselves with observing that he was eminently successful throughout.

Mr. YOUNG'S Iago was a complete hit. We really had no idea that he could have so entirely discorded the peculiarities of voice and manner which attend him more or less whenever he appears, and wrap himself so completely up in the garb of his author's fancy. He went through the many trying scenes in which he has to bear a principal share of the interest in a fine off-hand, and yet finished style; and in the soliloquies, which are, perhaps, the most difficult to get over, he was every thing that could be wished. We had not given Mr. Young credit for the extent and versatility of talent which he is master of, until we saw him this evening:—we hope the Play may be repeated, that the public may have it in their power to enjoy so fine a piece of acting. Miss FOOTE was a delightful Desdemona.

Mr. MACREADY is not at all suited for light comedy; but he bustled through the Count in a very creditable manner; and with the assistance of the three vocal stars, Misses STEPHENS, TREE, and HALLANDE, and the usual comic cast, the piece after went off extremely well.—The House was full.

DRURY LANE.

LAST night, Abroad and At Home, a Comic Opera, written by the late Mr. HOLMAN, was represented for the first time at this Theatre; and we should feel no regret if it were the last time, for it is a wretched piece, either as respects the plot, the characters, or the dialogue. The first has no ingenuity—no interest: and the chief incident from which the title is taken, is only worthy of farce. The characters have nothing but absurdity to recommend them; and the dialogue has only a dull vivacity to distinguish it. Such an Opera would require the finest music, and the most excellent acting in every part to make it tolerable. It does possess some very charming music, and Mr. BRAHAM and Miss POVEY executed its chief songs with great effect. But even these do not please so much as they would were they attached to characters that carry some interest. In regard to the acting, some parts were very well done as far as there was opportunity for exertion. The House was thinly attended.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. FITZWILLIAM, last night, had an excellent Benefit—every part of the House being crowded; The Heart of Mid Lothian, by T. DIBDEN was the first piece; which although, it has merit, is far from being a production that claims any high character. Mr. Dibdin, has from long acquaintance with the Stage, a happy dramatic knack, and a considerable share of humor, been able to produce many agreeable things which the Critics are always ready to let pass. We hear this gentleman is appointed Stage-Manager of The Haymarket Theatre, an office for which he is well qualified in several respects—But to the performance. Miss COPELAND played Mudge Wildfire, a character in which she gained great applause at the Surrey Theatre. She acts the unfortunate girl with great effect; throwing into it more of tenderness and sentiment than Mrs. EGERTON does; but, certainly not equalling the latter lady in the sterner parts. The play was in general well done. The Farce of The Review, was pleasantly performed: and the Concert went off well.

COVENT GARDEN.

There was a good House, last night, for the Benefit of the Western Philanthropic Society. The performances of Rob Roy Macgregor; and Cherry and Fair Star, were performed with their usual eclat.

AN EXPLANATION.

ON Monday last, we referred to a circumstance relative to Mr. HARRIS of Covent Garden Theatre, which we heartily regret having mentioned, because we and the public in general, have been grossly deceived. Who, that saw a BROTHER'S name signed to an advertisement in the Newspapers, making public a Brother's loss, could fail to imagine that the misfortune set forth had really happened. With Family matters, we have, of course, nothing to do; but in common with every friend to Mr. Harris, we must lament the publication of an unnecessary advertisement which will require some explanation to the public, who have, (no doubt unintentionally) been misled into the belief of a thousand erroneous circumstances.

ADELPHI.—Mr. ALEXANDRE'S Entertainment continues to attract in a high degree.—His performances are certainly most ingenious and diverting.

COVENT GARDEN.

THERE was a very well attended house, last night, to see The Law of Java, and Cherry and Fair Star. The whole of these performances, certainly, do not come within the description of a rational entertainment; for the excellent acting in the former piece cannot rid it of the weaknesses and absurdities that characterise it, nor can the splendid and beautiful scenes of the latter compensate for the utter absence of every thing intellectual in its composition. The Law of Java, has now run its nine nights; and although for the sake of Mr. Bishop's music, executed delightfully as it is by Miss Stephens and Miss Tree, there might exist some wish that the piece should go on longer, yet we must confess that a tenth representation would inevitably consign us to the custody of Morpheus, notwithstanding the lively strains of the fair Nourjadhee, and the facetious nota benes of that great traveller, Mr. Pengoose. We strongly recommend to the Managers, that they should for their own credit and Mr. Colman's fame, render The Law of Java, a dead-letter with all convenient speed: and if our opinion has little influence, we may adduce that of his Majesty, who, on the night he witnessed this piece, was observed to give one or two very critical yawns.

Had The Law of Java been written by any of those humbly gifted individuals who have furnished the Stage of late years with tragedy run-mad, we might have let the thing pass on silently, because the public, not being dazzled by a name, would have soon given it a quietus: but we cannot bear that GEORGE COLMAN, THE YOUNGER, the Author of so many comic dramas that have helped us often to pass a pleasant hour, should nightly be subjected to the lamentings of even the critics from Cheapside, who measure talent as they do muslin, by the yard; for they exclaim at the story being in such narrow compass, and that the wit is so small, and that some of Mr. Young's speeches are too long: in short that the piece is "a poor piece of goods;" and had better be "shelved." That Mr. Colman should come to be cut up by half-price gentry, and be "Poor-Georged!" by those who associate the decay of genius with the decay of life, is really distressing. For heavens sake! kind Managers save Mr.

Colman, if he is not able to save himself, from the quips of the pert young critics, and spare his old friends further mortification.—Why is not Othello repeated?

DRURY LANE.

MR. KEAN acted Wolsey last night for the third time; and we regret to say to a thin audience. It is not a character in which there is much to admire; nor are there many opportunities for his peculiar style to have full play. The tragedy itself has few inviting qualities for the stage; and two performances were quite sufficient.

There are many who argue from the poor attendances on Mr. Kean's nights of playing, that he has lost all his attraction. We deny this—but we cannot deny his inability to render an entire play attractive by his single talent. In our opinion Mr. Kean is still what he was, nay, superiour to what he was, when audiences would endure squeezing even in warm weather to witness his performances. Then why is there any apparent neglect of him?—Because he is unsupported by able performers.

MADAME VESTRIS's Benefit is postponed until this day week.

MR. ABBOTT and Mr. W. FARREN of Covent Garden Theatre, are to assume the direction of the Cheltenham Theatre.

CORRESPONDENTS.

"AN ENQUIRER" must apply for information elsewhere—But if he will be satisfied with what we have heard, yet cannot vouch for, we will tell him, that the reason assigned to us for Miss KELLY's long non-appearance at Drury Lane, is her having refused to yield up any portion of her salary in consequence of frequent inability to perform: this, it is said, caused the Manager to decline her services altogether, although he could not get rid of his liability to pay her full salary. We beg to add that we do not believe this story—we mention it because it is in circulation, and it should be contradicted from the proper quarter.

No's. 68, 76, and 97, of this Work are re-printed, and are ready for delivery.

COVENT GARDEN.

Mr. LISTON'S "Last Benefit at this Theatre" yesterday evening, was a most productive one: the House was crowded in all parts. He played Sir Bashful Constant, in the Comedy of The Way to Keep Him. It was a most amusing performance. Mrs. LISTON after the Comedy, came forward, assisted by her husband, to take leave of the public on her retiring from the Stage. She said and sung her Valedictory Address, which was written for the occasion by Mr. Colman. Mrs. Liston expressed the feelings natural on such an occasion; and the audience, remembering how often she has delighted with her sweet tones, paid her the tribute of their thanks and good wishes. Mr. Liston has called this his Last Benefit here, but we hope that although his engagement has terminated, it will be renewed next season. He goes to the Haymarket.

DRURY LANE.

The Peasant Boy, with Katherine and Petruchio, were the performances of last night, and were so pleasingly represented that we had little to regret, except the want of an audience to join in our satisfaction.

ENGLISH OPERA HOUSE.

It is understood that Mr. MATHEWS at the close of the present highly successful Season, quits England, on a Visit to the UNITED STATES, for one whole year; so that the public will not have an opportunity of seeing him (excepting on the 10 nights announced) for the space of Two YEARS—a long time to be deprived of a delightful Entertainment, by which he has excited, undiminished laughter and merriment, for nearly 200 Evenings, that he has been "AT HOME" at this House.

The ENGLISH Opera Summer Season is to open on the 11th of June, and we hear that the Company is to perform alternately with Mr. MATHEWS, three nights a week until his Season closes. The proprietor has been active in securing talent. It is reported that Miss CAREW, Miss POVEY, and a young lady, a pupil of Mr. JAMES WELSH, (from whom much may be expected) are engaged in addition to the former favorites, Messrs. BARTLEY, HARLEY, WRENCH, EMERY, T. P. COOKE, PEARMAN, BROADHURST, and WILKINSON, are retained in their various Situations. Several new Singers are to appear; and Miss KELLY returns to lead the Comic Department. Various new pieces from the pens of the successful Dramatic Authors, Messrs. Planche, Moncrieff, Beasley, and R. B. Peake, are to be brought forward: and the mighty Winter Mammoths closing their all endeavouring jaws during the Summer months, will give this Theatre a chance and prospect, it has never before enjoyed.

BATH THEATRE. "The admirers of vocal excellence, will learn with regret, that Miss WILSON takes leave of us this Evening, (Saturday June 1st,) when we have no doubt she will impart to the interesting Polly all the fascinating effect that such vocal talent, combined with a natural genius for acting, is capable of producing. Great expectations are formed of the new Tragedy, entitled Clemenza; or, The Tuscan Orphan;" to be brought forward for Miss Wilson's Benefit. It is said to be the production of a gentleman now residing in Bath; and is cast with the full strength of the company. The higher circles of the patrons of the Drama appear to take a high interest in its success."

LIMA THEATRICALS.—The Theatre at Lima is open twice a week. It is the fashion there for the Ladies to stand up in the front Boxes and smoke Segars, which they light by the chandeliers. The brightest beauty is thus often obscured by a cloud of smoke, to the temporary regret of her admirers.

Mr. Alexandre and Mr Mathews—The performances of these two gentlemen have been compared by some persons, but in our opinion they are so distinct a species of Entertainment, as to put comparison out of the question. Mr. Alexandre's attraction rests on his astonishing powers of Ventriloquism, whilst Mr. MATHEWS claims our attention for the surprising truth of his personal imitations, his singular narrative, anecdote, and humor. Each in short should be seen by every one who has a spark of curiosity, and loves a laugh.

DRURY LANE.

WE are glad to say that Mr. KEAN's kind intentions have not been quite foiled, although they were not so successful as he might have hoped. Last night, which he selected for what was termed his Benefit, but which he humanely turned to the Relief of the unfortunate Peasantry in Ireland, was a night that will be treasured up in the memory of all who possess congenial feelings with the good-hearted KEAN. It is always with sincere pleasure that we notice the virtues that ornament our species, in conjunction with the talent that adorns the Stage. Actors are persons whose private character can never be wholly separated from their professional one; and it is, therefore, very necessary that in seeking the public eye, they should bring with them a real character that shall not tarnish the reputation they would earn in a fictitious one. In regard to Mr. Kean, the best proof of his private conduct is the general regard borne him from the highest down to the lowest individual of the establishment he is connected with: and in the sacrifice which he made last night, is only to be seen an extension of his benevolence, which those of his immediate circle have often witnessed in a more limited way.

Such of our readers as have followed us from our commencement, will be aware of our steady opinion of this gentleman's talents. We have formed that opinion from a long and close marking of his acting; and we deem him well-meriting the title of "first of actors" which Aretinus bestows on Paris, and which the audience affixed to Mr. Kean by loud assenting applause. We are aware of many faults in his style; but we only repeat what we have often remarked, that he shews in every character he assumes, the powerful mind he possesses. Mr. Kean's genius outshines that of any actor of the present day—(we speak it without derogating from the distinguished talent that is elsewhere to be found) his soul is imbued, as it were, with the attributes he has to personify; and he conveys the impression to the heart and understanding, with a truth and force that is irresistible.

The Scene from Massinger's Play of The Roman Actor, was produced as a sort of appeal to the public on the merits of the Stage; and seemed to have a particular reference to that neglect which Drury Lane Theatre has so long laboured under, and often most unmeritedly. With the cause of that neglect, Mr. Kean, we think, has no connexion—his nights performances have generally been the most productive. In The Mountaineers he sustained the part of Octavian in a manner that drew tears from many a fair eye in every part of the house. It was altogether a performance the most correct, forcible, and affecting, we ever witnessed. Mr. HARLEY who played Sadi, acted with extraordinary humor, spirit, and effect. Amusing as he is at all times, he never was more so than he was last night, as the happy tawny moor, and as Robin in the Farce of The Waterman, in which piece Mr. Kean used the freedom of a Benefit night to assume the part of Tom Tug. He sang the songs with much taste and expression: his voice is sweet, not powerful, but very distinct in its cadences. He was encored in each song, and well deserved this testimony of approbation. But the frequent applauses which were bestowed on his acting throughout the evening, could not be compared with the enthusiastic burst of feeling expressed by the audience in every quarter when he came forward to make his bow on the fall of the curtain. The consciousness of meriting this warmth of approbation shone modestly on his countenance, whilst he seemed to express his happiness at having been instrumental in the cause of humanity.

The Pit was quite full; the Dress-boxes were tolerably well attended, but the house was otherwise indifferently so.

COVENT GARDEN.

Julius Cæsar with Cherry and Fair Star were very poorly attended, last night. Vauxhall, no doubt, affected both the houses.

VAUXHALL-GARDENS

This fairy-land, was last night opened by the new Proprietors for the season, under the patronage of his Majesty. Words cannot express the numerous beauties of this scene of splendour and gaiety. The proprietors have spared no expense in rendering the whole worthy of the name of the most brilliant place of amusement in Europe. The gardens have been newly decorated with transparencies, &c.—a theatre, cosmoramas, and various other attractions have been added. The chief novelty, however, is what is denominated "The Heptaplasiosopticon!" It is erected at one of the extremities of the Saloon. Description cannot convey an adequate idea of this costly and brilliant appendage. It is an area beautifully illuminated, having revolving pillars, entwined by serpents, and the whole enveloped by Palm Trees. In the centre is a refreshing fountain; and by means of looking-glasses, artfully placed, a most striking and magnificent reflection of the whole objects is presented.

The singing, fireworks, dancing, calling and drinking, were all admirably executed. The crowd of elegance, beauty, &c. &c. was delightfully immense.

DRURY LANE.

O'KEEFE'S comic Opera of The Castle of Andalusia, was acted, last night, to a very thin audience. There were at least three or four performers in the piece that might be thought worthy of going to see, but it would appear that the fashionable, and, even, the unfashionable part of the public, were better engaged; or, were afraid of a tremendous squeeze; or had lost all relish for harmony and good-humor, at least for the night. With respect to the first supposition, we must acknowledge, that a card-party at Lady Trumps, or an Amateur Concert at Mrs. Crackwhistle's, where the two Miss Crackwhistle's, and Mr. Croaker, would take a leading part; or a turtle feast at General Jaundice's, with his Lady's evening's party, and a hundred other such treats, might all prove adverse to the Theatres, and occasion an infinite deal too much reverberation within the walls of Drury from the songs of BRAHAM, and the rattle of HARLEY. Then, as to the second imagined cause of absence, this Theatre has so often, of late, resembled the Black-hole of Calcutta, that it was very prudent, in all who wished to breathe freely, to go to any rout or assembly, even at an Alderman's in that breezy place, Dowgate-Hill, rather than venture their lives amidst the accustomed crush on Mr. Elliston's groaning benches.

In regard to the last conception, that the whole town was out of tune, and out of temper, last night, some of our Opposition gentlemen would find causes enough for more than a temporary failure of the best endeavours to entertain the Bull family in a rational and tasteful manner. They might assert that the diminution in the sum-total of Rent-Rolls, and the continued visits of gentlemen with ruled books under their arms, were sufficient to make any one forego the pleasure of hearing Mr. BRAHAM or Madame VESTRIS sing.

But, seriously, it is a matter of surprise that these distinguished vocalists were not better attended in a very amusing Opera, where not only the music of the piece, but that introduced, was most delightful. We would not for a great deal have missed Braham sing, "On this cold flinty rock." It was beautifully given, and rapturously encored. His duetto of "All's Well" with Mr. HOWARD, was also delightfully executed. By the bye, we are to blame in not having noticed the latter gentleman, whose first appearance at this Theatre took place recently. He has a pleasing voice upon the whole, with a considerable proficiency in its scientific management.

Mr. HARLEY was very comical as Pedrillo. This gentleman's acting is at any time a tolerably good cure for the Blue Devils. There is something so determinedly good humored about his features, and a tone so absolutely adverse to any thing like grief, that the veriest crab must needs bottle up his vinegar, and the most doleful hypocondriac lay by the signs of his sorrow. Mr. H. is, moreover, the most moving performer of his day, for he has busted us out of many a tear, but it was a laughter-pumped one.

Mr. KNIGHT played Spado, with the activity and cunning of a practised rogue. Miss FORDE represented Victoria, and sang in that style which makes us conscious of her ability with good instruction to sing much better. Madame VESTRIS as Lorenza gave "Love! gay illusion!" in such a delightful strain that an encore necessarily followed. Miss CUBITT performed Catalina tolerably well—she is very capable of improving in the acting department if she would take pains.

COVENT GARDEN.

THIS House never has been so badly attended throughout the season, as it was last night. The Law of Java, and the Farce of Love, Law, and Physic, were the performances. Of the former we can only say it proceeds. Of the latter we can only say that we laughed heartily at Mr. YATES's Flexible, and Mr. LISTON's Lubin Log. The former was encored in The Mail Coach song. And the latter would have been encored in all his vulgar tricks and habits, were it the fashion to encore what is spoken.

COVENT GARDEN.

If this Theatre had been placed under the equator, and neither breezes nor fans were to be had, we would have gladly undergone the most profuse perspiration the climate could have produced, in order to witness the admirable performance of The School for Scandal, which, last night, was executed in a style that has never been surpassed, nay, perhaps, not equalled. The whole cast, as it is called, of the characters, was, as before, highly appropriate, and calculated to confer the best effect, not only individually, but generally; for the happy manner in which the performers act up to each other, gives a reality and vividness to every scene, that, united with the sterling wit, the just satire of the piece, occasions the most fixed attention and delight in the audience. It is really a treat of the first order to witness this excellent Comedy as it is acted here. Mr. C. KEMBLE as Charles; Mr. YOUNG as Joseph; Mr. W. FARRER as Sir Peter Teazle; Mr. FAWCETT as Sir Oliver; Mr. YATES as Moses; Mr. LUSTON as Sir Benjamin Backbite; Mr. BLANCHARD as Crabtree; then Mrs. DAVISON as Lady Teazle; Miss FOOTE as Maria; Mrs. GIBBS as Mrs. Candour—in short every one who had a part in the piece distinguished themselves. Even the servants who removed the chairs, or who handed the tea and coffee were done to the life. We intreat of the Managers to favor the Public with a repetition of this Play; we are convinced that there is not one that will do the establishment more service by, at least, extending the reputation of its performers.

---

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN again represented Wolsey, last night: he gave the same forcible markings to the character as before, and well earned the frequent applause bestowed on him by the slender company in the House. But we think it injudicious to have acted Henry the Eighth any more this season; nay, we think Mr. KEAN should conclude his appearances just now. Audiences of any consequence are not to be drawn to this House at present by either genuine Tragedy or Comedy, although there might be some chance of attracting our Country Cousins, and foreign visitors, were The Coronation to be again brought forward; and a good Melo-drame tacked to it, together with a laughable Farce that had some novelty in it. The Tale of Mystery, followed the Tragedy—it is a frothy, absurd affair: but Melo-drame must not be measured by the rule of reason.

DRURY LANE.

PIZARRO was acted yesterday evening for the last time this season ; Mr. KEAN playing Rolla, and Mrs. GLOVER Elvira. This Drama is an admirable acting piece—the language and the incidents are vigorous and imposing, whereby the attention is continually kept rivetted on the scene. The characters of Rolla, Pizarro, and Elvira, are boldly drawn and well maintained throughout: Alonzo and Cora, are of a more common order, and interest upon the domestic principle of conjugal love. Rolla, as personated by Mr. Kean, loses nothing of the popularity which Mr. Kemble gave to the character. The latter, in some parts, derived advantage from the superiority of his figure, but he never equalled Mr. Kean in the highly empassioned scenes. Mr. Kemble was much inferior to Mr. Kean in the scene where Cora's child is brought in. The manner of the latter in falling at Pizarro's feet, and the agony of his tones, are the most affecting instances of histrionic skill we ever beheld.

Mrs. GLOVER's Elvira, is a striking performance. She gives much point to many passages ; but she infuses little of that elevated and commanding manner which is essential to the proper performance of the character. Her features are not well adapted for the representation of stern characters, and some of her tones are equally unsuitable to them. But her judgment and knowledge of her profession carry her respectably through any part she chooses to undertake.

Mr. COOPER acted Alonzo with considerable effect ; and Mrs. WEST as Cora was highly interesting. The Play merited a better attendance; for the House was, as an Irish friend remarked, " full of empty benches."

Madame VESTRIS acted Paul, in the Entertainment of Paul and Virginia, in her accustomed interesting manner, and sang most sweetly. This lady takes her Benefit to-night. Her engagement at this Theatre, we believe, concludes with the present season.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Law of Java, was performed last night, for the tenth time, to a very thin house in every part. We are sorry, for Mr. Colman's sake, to see this piece run on, because it is only extending an injury to his his dramatic fame. We were equally sorry to find that he had perpetuated the memory of this weak effort as far as he could, by printing the piece. If it were his object merely to get a few pounds for the copy-right, we are sorry he should be compelled to dispose of so much of his good fame by the bargain for so paltry a sum as any bookseller would give him for The Law of Java. The following is a sample of the humorous songs :—

SONG.—Pengoose.

When a Tourist describes her, each Female expects That some charm he'll extract from her downright defects :
In her Squint, a soft languish can, sure, be discern'd,
And her Leg, though of wood, may be mighty-well turned.

Should her Visage exhibit too much of the Rose,
Praise the bloom in her Cheek, and stop short at her Nose,
And, if Ladies have Noses, like Aces of Clubs,
Call them arch-looking Angels,—but don't talk of Snubs.

Of a charmer, whose teeth Absentees we may style,
Say, how sweetly she purses her lips in a smile !
And, when her red locks into ringlets she twirls,
Not a word of her carrots—but cry up her curls.

In your Book, let the virtuous Fair, of each Nation,
Be printed with Notes of deserved Admiration ;
While they, whose faux pas furnish Scandal with data,
Need only be mentioned among the Errata.

BIRMINGHAM THEATRE. The eccentric entertainment, called Tom and Jerry was brought out at this Theatre on Monday week; and has been repeated every night, except one. On the first two evenings it produced good houses, and, on the fair nights the Pit and Gallery overflowed: the Boxes also were by no means deficient of company at either of its representations. The success of the Piece was secured by the engagement of Mr. WRENCH and Mrs. WAYLETT, the original representatives of Corinthian Tom, and Sue, and that of Mr. J. RUSSELL, who acquired equal fame as Logic, in Dublin.

The Receipts of the Benefit at this Theatre in aid of the Fund for the suffering Irish, fell short of the night's expenditure !—Mr. BUNN, the proprietor, has, however, with great liberality, contributed twenty guineas as a private donation to the Fund.

THE EXETER THEATRE was lately obliged to be closed for want of an audience: and this too, when the much-admired Mr. DOWTON was to have played Sir John Falstaff, in Henry the Fourth.

BRISTOL THEATRE. The performances at this Theatre on Thursday, May 30th, were for the Benefit of the starving peasantry in Ireland, The Performers and all the Servants of the House, gave their gratuitous services; but the Receipts amounted to no more than £28. 11s. 6d.

DRURY LANE.

MADAME VESTRIS, yesterday evening had her Benefit, which she called her "last at this Theatre;" and we are glad to say that considering how much Drury appears to be disliked by the public, the house was well attended. The Pit had only standing-room; the Dress-boxes and First Circle were full; and the Galleries were pretty well occupied. The Performances were The Peasant Boy, with a Concert, and The Devil to Pay. Madame Vestris played Julian in the former piece very pleasingly...her melo-dramatic action is always animated and correct, and full of sentiment. She has been much employed throughout the season; and, although rather too often in male characters, yet often enough in female ones to win the favour which an agreeable actress is sure to gain. Her voice, so rich and melodious, has added to her many attractions; and if she is indeed not to appear again at Drury Lane, we trust to see her elsewhere. She met, last night, with much applause in the Opera, and particularly at the conclusion of that speech of Julian which ends with these words—"I may become the Victim of Circumstance, but I have never been the Slave of Crime!" Many of her songs were encored; and she seemed much fatigued before the after-piece commenced, in which she performed Nell very humourously.

COVENT GARDEN.

Last night, Mr. W. FARREN took his Benefit here, when the performances, were Guy Mannering, Love-a-la-Mode, and The Two Pages of Frederick the Great. In the first Mr. FARREN played Meg Merrilles, with very good effect, although his voice was rather too masculine for a female part: He died well, and received great applause. Mr. ABBOTT, who was Colonel Mannering, set the audience laughing by saying, "perhaps she is only a sheep" instead of "perhaps she is only asleep." Mr. F. represented Sir Archy Macsarcasm, in the second piece but so—so:—His scotch dialect is not good. But he was quite at home as the old King of Prussia, and the audience enjoyed the information that his Majesty would take off two years taxes. A fellow in the Gallery made some noises in humble imitation of that astonishing Ventriloquist, Mr. ALEXANDRE.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Managers of this Theatre, influenced by the same humane consideration for the distress of the Irish Peasantry, that has marked every class in this country, on Saturday night gave a Benefit for them; but their good intentions have been, we are sorry to say, as in almost every instance of the kind, totally foiled by the public not choosing to contribute in this way to the charitable object. The Dress-Boxes had about as many as would fill the front seats; the Pit was not above one third filled, and the other parts nearly empty. Instead of Profit there must have been a considerable Loss on the night's performances, for we do not think the Receipts could have amounted to Eighty Pounds, whilst the average expences we should think are not far from One Hundred Pounds above that sum. So much for the efforts of Theatrical Charity! The performances were The Lord of the Manor, and Husbands and Wives: but who could enjoy the efforts on the Stage, when the reflection of their inutility for the intended purpose, continually occurred. We perceive The Haymarket Theatre is to open on the 15th, with a Benefit for the same humane object. We almost regret it—although there may, indeed, be a little better chance of a sufficient audience being collected there, by a desire to see the House in its improved state.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN acted Othello, with his usual excellence, on Saturday night, for the last time this season. The House was better attended, particularly at half-price, than it has been for some time.

VAUXHALL-GARDENS.

It was most amusing, the other evening, to hear the various ways the Promenaders pronounced that hard word Heptaplusiesoptron. When the time approached for it to be seen, some cried—

"Now for the Hippee-plaister-on!"

"Lauk! let's see the Hipple-sip-tron!"

"I'm off for the Hop-toe-la-see-soap-town!"

"You'll be wastly struck with the Hip-tea-see-sue-supp'd-on!"

"Arrah! what's He-up-to-plase-ye-poltroon!"

"Poltroon! Sir"—answered the person addressed—"I don't understand such language!"

"Nor I by the powers!"

"Then, how dare you use it, Sir? Do you think yourself at Donnybrook Fair?"

"What! are you after casting reflections!"

"Hush, hush, Sirs,"—cried an old pedantic looking gentleman, with a pair of green spectacles on his nose—"there are no reflections in the case, except those of the Hep-ta-pla-sic-sop-tron! and very beautiful reflections they are."

COVENT GARDEN.

LAST night Mr. YOUNG played Macbeth. This is a character in which he does not eminently shine: he occasionally strikes, but the general effect is weak. The murder-scene, and that of the banquet, are the only ones where he gives any tokens of being a great actor;—but in these, even, he was, last night, comparatively tame and unequal. There was a languor about his whole performance—an abandonment of discrimination—an unambitious manner and tone, that did as much as say, "I care not how I act the part, so I get through it." Perhaps, Mr. Young was oppressed with the sultry weather, which, indeed, was a sufficient apology for not giving himself up to a vigorous representation of the character. He drew some applause in the dagger soliloquy, and in the banquet-scene, where he braves the ghost of Banquo. There is some diversity of opinion on the propriety of his manner in this part: Mr. Young in exclaiming "Hence horrible vision," &c.—follows up the departing Banquo, which is considered by some as conforming with the bold spirit of the man who dares do whatever man can do;—whilst some think that although Macbeth in words braves the spirit of Banquo, whom he has so recently murdered, yet that it is out of nature for him to accompany those words with action that seems to dispel all idea of his having in reality a fixed horror at the sight. It would, certainly, we think, be better for Macbeth to stand fixed to one spot, whilst he bids the spirit "Hence!" instead of pressing on as if he meant to grapple with the unsubstantial vision.

Mr. ABBOTT'S Maeduff, is a very poor performance.

Mrs. FAUCIT makes a most indifferent Lady Macbeth.

The Witch music was miserably executed; particularly the echo part: One might have thought the nymphs of the Echo had got sore throats. Hecate, walked off, instead of "flying by night." Her broomstick, no doubt, was lost or mislaid. The House was thinly attended.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN acted Glo'ster yesterday evening, for the last time this season. He never played this character better; and at the close, the applause and cheering continued for above a minute. To-morrow he performs for the last time until the re-opening.

This House had an audience fully equal to that at Covent Garden.—This Theatre closes on Friday.

AMERICAN THEATRICALS. It would appear from the American Newspapers, that theatrical talent is well rewarded in that part of the world. A New York Paper of May 14, mentions, that a Mr. SIMPSON received from his Benefit there “two thousand six hundred and fifty dollars, and fifty cents.”—that is, about £600!—and great numbers went away who could not get admission from want of room.

Mr. WALLACK, is mentioned as having given an Entertainment at the Philadelphia Theatre, on May 13, consisting of Readings, Recitations, Songs, Imitations, &c. He was attended by a most numerous and fashionable audience, who were delighted by the “versatility and if we may use the term, the elasticity of his genius.” He walks on crutches.

At Louisveile Kentuckey, they have got Mr. COOPER “the great actor”. It being understood that he was to perform only one night, there was such an anxiety to see him, that “Boxes of ten seats brought from 16 to 20 dollars, and the House was full before sunset!” Mr. Cooper from this success, was so wise as to repeat his performances for six nights more. He was caressed and feasted by the first citizens; and altogether netted eleven hundred dollars, (about £250) within the week, which sum he invested in Whiskey, as the best medium of remittance!

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

On Saturday last, there was strong muster of the company engaged at this Theatre for the ensuing season, to commence on Saturday next. Amongst the respectable corps are to be found the names of Messrs. LISTON, C. KEMBLE, TERRY, JONES, Madame VESTRIS, and Mrs. CHATTERLEY, We believe Mrs. H. JOHNSTONE may be added to the list. Amongst the new candidates for public favor are Mr. CLIFFORD from the Norwich Theatre; Mr. W. WEST, who lately appeared as Lord Ogleby at Drury Lane, and a young Lady, who it is said is to make her debut as Polly in The Beggars' Opera, and who is a pupil of Mr. CORRI.

DEATH OF MR. STEPHEN KEMBLE.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne, June 8.—Died, on the 6th instant, at the Grove, near Durham, in the sixty-fourth of his age, after a short illness, STEPHEN GEORGE KEMBLE, Esq. the celebrated Comedian, and formerly Manager of the Theatres Royal, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Drury-lane. Mr. Kemble had retired for some years from the exercise of the laborious profession of an actor, which he adorned no less by his talents than by the unsullied integrity and respectability of his private character. Few men lived more generally esteemed and respected: and there are few whose death will be more sincerely and lastingly regretted.

DRURY LANE.

LAST night, Mr. BRAHAM played Hawthorn in the Opera of Love in a Village, and gave the songs with that taste, and sweet and powerful tone for which he is distinguished as the first male singer on the English Stage. This gentleman, with all his admirable and astonishing musical talent, has not been able on the nights he has performed during the present season, to overcome the prejudice existing against this Theatre. This certainly may be in a great degree attributed to the little attraction in the musical department here, taken altogether. There has been no leading female singer of sufficient merit to be placed beside him, and the consequence was, that the lovers of Opera were not fully gratified.

The House was thin at first, but the Pit filled at half-price, and the Boxes got a considerable accession.

Mr. BRAHAM takes his Benefit here to-morrow evening, and as he assumes a part in a popular piece, and will throw in the whole of his skill and force, with the aid of other eminent singers, it may be expected to prove a very brilliantly attended one.

We understand that in consequence of the unproductive performance at this theatre of late, Mr. Braham has, with great consideration and liberality, refused to take any payment for the last six nights he has performed. We believe he was engaged at £30, per night, or 20 if the audiences were not numerous. Thus he has given up a claim on the manager amounting to £120.

Mr. KEAN is to appear at the Bath Theatre, on Saturday next, to commence an engagement of six nights. He is to play Othello, Glo'ter, Sir Giles Overreach, De Montfort, Sir Pertinax Macsycophant, and Lear. We believe he afterwards proceeds to Dublin. Mr. Kean's Benefit for the poor Irish Sufferers amounted in the gross to

The Expences amounted to..... 242 6s. 4d.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE Performances of last night, were Henri Quatre, and The Miller and His Men, for the Benefit of that excellent actor Mr. EMERY: We trust that he has had reason to be satisfied with the results: but we regret that he did not let us see him in some of those characters in which he is particularly eminent. We think his Tyke would have gratified more than his Moustache; although he plays the latter very well.

MR. ALEXANDRE.

THIS most ingenious gentleman, and astonishing Ventriloquist, is now bringing his Entertainment at the Adelphi Theatre, of The Rogueries of Nicholas, to a conclusion; as he only performs two more nights, namely, on Thursday and Saturday. It is surprising that a foreigner should in a short time attain such a very correct knowledge of our language as to enable him to amuse an English audience for an entire evening by his single exertions—we trust his assiduity has been amply repaid—it has well merited patronage; but, independent of his industry, the wonderful natural talent he possesses of imitating sounds and of casting the voice into any quarter he pleases, is of itself sufficient to attract in the highest degree.

LIVERPOOL THEATRE. The Manager has reduced the prices of admission, to the following—Lower Boxes, 4s. Upper Boxes, 3s. 6d. Pit, 2s. 6d. Gallery, 1s.

Theatrical Fracas.—Last Monday week this Theatre was opened for the season, with the play of Coriolanus, in which Mr. Vandenhoff made his first appearance on his re-engagement. A number of persons in the house, were very vociferous in behalf of Mr. Salter who had been displaced to make room for Mr. V. The uproar continued long after the curtain had fallen; five forms were torn from the gallery, and thrown into the pit: miraculously, the first did no mischief, and caused a general flight before the rest came down. On Tuesday night the disturbance was still more violent, and on the following evening neither the play nor farce could be heard.

EDINBURGH THEATRE. The Benefit given at this Theatre, on behalf of the Suffering Irish on Thursday week like all the other attempts of the kind, was quite unproductive.

MR. STEPHEN KEMBLE. The last time this lamented gentleman appeared on the Stage was on the 20th of May, when he performed Sir Christopher Curry, in Inkle and Yarico, for the Benefit of a part of his family. He appeared at that time in his usual health; but in a few days afterwards he was attacked by inflammation in the bowels, which terminated his existence.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. KEAN, last night, performed Macbeth, which terminated his appearances here this season. He exerted himself greatly on several occasions: particularly in the Murder-scene where he gave a most appalling picture of a mind freshly touched with guilt, and labouring under the deep debasement that shuts out all hope of future peace. But in the Dagger-scene, Mr. Kean was not so successful as we have seen him—he did not, as he has often done, make us momentary participators in the belief of that being real, which was but a vision springing from a blood-haunted mind. We were not entranced with him for an instant; nor was there any awakening magic in his exclamation of 'there is no such thing!' In the Banquet-scene he acted most powerfully—adhering as much to nature and probability as they admit of being followed where supernatural agency is employed. The remaining scenes do not in general admit of the same nice discrimination—they are more filled with sound and fury, and make a larger demand on the physical powers than Mr. Kean can uniformly well sustain. Yet he fought bravely, and died amidst the glory of applause, which amply proved the impression made by his able efforts.

Mrs. W. WEST improves in Lady Macbeth; but she did not read the Letter well—and her emphases are often wrong placed. A close study of the meaning of her author, would, with the judgment she in general displays, rectify these improprieties. Yet we would fain have her keep out of this deep tragic line, for it is not forte. We have for some time been desirous to know what has become of Miss EDMISTON. We trust she has not withdrawn from the Metropolitan Stage—she is, and, we think, will become still more an ornament of it.

Mr. BRAHAM takes a Benefit here to-night: from his admirable vocal talents, and the numerous other attractions of the evening, a full House may be expected,

COVENT GARDEN.

Mrs. GIBBS and Mr. YATES had a Bensfit here, last night, which was well attended. On this occasion The Merchant of Venice, was acted, with Mr. YOUNG as Shylock, and Mr. MACREADY for the first time, as Antonio. The former gentleman played the Jew with less effect than we expected. In the judgment-scene, particularly, he fell considerably short of the due marking of inveterate malice. His acting there was too isolated—if we may use the expression—he kept his eye too much averted from the object of his blood-thirsty hate; and his back was turned too broadly on the court. Shylock should in the outset of this scene confront Antonio with the gaze of the hungry eagle on its prey—and the doubtful success of his suit for the penalty should not repress any of the strong markings of antipathy. Mr. Young did not execute the character at this part so well as that where the penalty is awarded him, when he gave a forcible picture of determined, deadly, malignity. His eagerness in pulling out the Scales, and the whetting his Knife, shewed Shylock's heart to the very core to be made of most murderous and baneful stuff.

Mr. MACREADY acted Antonio, with considerable effect; but he had no great opportunities of shewing his peculiar talents. He took leave of his friend Bassanio with much feeling, and was loudly applauded. The latter character was pleasingly performed by Mr. CONNOR, as was Gratiano by Mr. YATES.

Mrs. FAUCIT was rather imposing as Portia. Mrs. GIBBS played Nerissa very suitably.

After the Play, a short Entertainment, entitled "The Boyhood and Old Age of Mr. Yates," was presented, consisting of two scenes, and three persons of the Drama, but only two representatives. The first scene shews an apartment where the servant Robert is laying dinner—Master Pretty, personated by Mr. Yates in nankeens and a scarlet jacket, comes trundling in his hoop, and plays many wayward tricks—shewing a great predeliction for acting; and makes poor Robert the but of his humors by throwing a shoulder of mutton, dishes and ail, at his head. He then drinks up all the wine, and exhibits a boy of fifteen reeling drunk, and retires to the china closet to complete his amusements by tumbling about amongst the crockery.

But the scene changes from the handsome, comfortable dining-room of Master Pretty's Papa, to the miserable garret of Master Pretty, now an old worn-out Actor of 75, living on the Theatrical Fund, in the year 1782! The servant-lad Robert, it appears, has also survived to this period, and totters in bending under the weight of 85 years. They talk over old times—Robert still calling the old actor, "Master Pretty," and regretting that "Young Master" had given up independence for the Stage. Old Master Pretty, however, consoles himself with the memory of past fame, and acts over the scenes of former days according to the manner of some of the most distinguished performers of his time. MESSRS. JOHN KEMBLE, YOUNG, MACREADY, W. FARREN, and BRAHAM, are the subjects of his imitations, which are most excellent, particularly, these of Mr. Young and Mr. Farren.

After going through several passages in which these performers have been conspicuous, Mr. YATE's pays a well merited compliment to Mr. MATHEWS, whom he imitates no farther than in—"all that sort of thing, and every thing in the world," and concludes his Old Age with a moral remark on all the World being a Stage, and all the men and women merely players. He was loudly applauded for his imitations, which were all that was valuable in this benefit-sketch.

The Marriage of Figarro completed the evening's entertainments in good style, and much to the satisfaction of the very genteel audience.

DRURY LANE.

Mr. BRAHAM, the first male singer in this country, perhaps in the world, and whose talents have raised him to independence, last night, took a Benefit here, which was as brilliant as it was crowded. His delightful and astonishing powers of voice were on this occasion put forth in numerous favorite songs throughout the evening, and he never, perhaps, at any period of his distinguished career, gave greater delight. He played Count Belino in The Devil's Bridge, and was tolerably well supported by Miss FORDE as Countess Rosalvina, who appeared in this part for the first time. The other characters were well sustained by Mr. HARLEY, Mr. KNIGHT, Miss CUBITT, and Miss COPELAND. The other entertainments went off well. Mr. KELLNER sung most delightfully; and in the Farce of The Rival Soldiers, Mr. MUNDEN's Nipperkin was truly amusing.

DRURY LANE.

LAST night concluded a most disastrous season for this House. A season that commenced (from the entertainments selected) inauspiciously for the regular Drama, although momentarily profitable, but when an improved system was adopted, strange to say, proceeded amidst neglect, and terminated with ruin. The cause of the abandonment of this Theatre by the great body of the public on occasions when it might have been expected good taste would have led multitudes thither, has been matter of much speculation. To us, who have more closely attended the proceedings at each Theatre than, perhaps, any of the reporters of other public journals, it appears that there were several causes for its being so little frequented. In the first place there was the peculiar state of the times tending to diminish attendances on public amusements—In the next place there was the ill-assorted company at this House, particularly for the tragic line, which left Mr. KEAN alone to bear up this department. Then, there was the form of the House which has ever been objectionable; and to this had to be added the filthy condition it was in. Beyond these, we must allude to the evident want of means or skill to execute arrangements with perfect effect. Thus this Theatre, opposed to the more approved construction, sociability, freshness, expensive and happy combinations of dramatic art with musical, mechanical, and scenic talent, exhibited in Covent Garden Theatre, could not maintain the contest for attraction, and so many a well-acted, standard-play, was neglected for the enjoyment at the rival establishment of often less valuable performances.

Last night, The Mountaineers, with an interlude of Ventriloquism, by Mons. ALEXANDRE; and Inkle and Yarico, cut down to 2 acts, were the representations. The audience, which was pretty numerous, naturally expected an Address as usual at the close of a season—but the last piece terminated without any person coming forward. Loud cries of "Address!" "Address!" now issued from every quarter, when, at length Mr. COOPER appeared, and spoke as follows:—

"Ladies and Gentlemen, I am not empowered by the management to offer you any Address—I regret to say that at this moment Mr. Elliston is confined to his house by severe indisposition. I, therefore, Ladies and Gentlemen, can only on my own part, and on that of the other performers, return you our thanks, and respectfully bid you Farewell!"—There were some murmurings and some applause at this speech, when the audience departed. We shall revert to this subject hereafter.

COVENT GARDEN.

Guy Mannering, with Bombastes Furioso, and A Roland for an Oliver, were performed last night for the Benefit of Mr. BLANCHARD, &c. We should have been happy to have seen the Upper Boxes as well attended as the Pit and Dress-Boxes.

HAY-MARKET.

On Saturday night, this Theatre opened for the season. The interior has undergone some alterations which upon the whole may be considered improvements. The tympanum, or sounding board, has been removed, and a cornice has been carried round the top, which gives a more finished effect than existed before—the proscenium also has been re-touched, we understand, by Mr. Marinari's hand—the seats of the Boxes have been more conveniently placed, and, certainly, the satisfaction and comfort of the audience have been fully attended to. We, however, visited the Gallery to ascertain the hearing there, and were sorry to find it by no means so perfect as we had expected. We mention this in order that the Performers may keep up their voices. On the drawing up of the Curtain, the whole of the performers on the establishment, who could attend, were discovered—when they advanced, and sang "God save the King." A New Medley Overture, in which various Irish airs were introduced, was pretty well executed, the Band being led by Mr. VERSTRIEN.

On this occasion a new Farceical Sketch, in one Act, from the mirthful pen of Mr. T. DINDIN, who is the Stage-manager, was produced, under the title of The Bill of Fare; or, for Further Particulars Enquire Within. It is a light temporary piece, adapted to the opening of the Theatre, and not likely to be longer of use to it than the period that event can with propriety be dwelt on. The Plot is as follows:—

Solomon Strutt, a Provincial Manager, a very Tate Wilkinson, (Mr. Terry) has advertised for Performers, under the initials of S. S. And Samuel Stingo, (Mr. Oxberry) a Provincial Innkeeper, has advertised at the same time, under the same initials, for Servants for his new Inn. The two advertisers happen to put up at the same House, which is kept by one Hoaxley, (Mr. Johnson) a fellow more fond of sprees and jokes than looking after his business. This Jerry landlord orders his waiter for a little fun, to shew up the servants that come to be hired, into the Manager's room, and the performers into that of the bumpkin Innkeeper. The consequence of this will be easily conceived—innumerable mistakes of words and actions ensue—The Country Beer-drawer is beset by an Actress of All-Work, &c- whilst the rural Stage-man has a fellow as broad as he is long, who offer himself as a "second Cook (E)" which the poor Manager interprets into an equal of the far-famed George Frederick! This Sketch would be improved by curtailment. It was laughed at, and permitted to pass as a trifle adapted to the occasion. The School for Scandal, and The Irishman in London, followed. We have not space to-day to speak of the merits of several of the performers in these pieces who are new to the town; but when we do enter on criticism respecting them, we shall not forget that the Summer Houses are not exactly the places which admit of very rigid strictures. We are at present rather inclined to wear the smiles of the season, and to consider ourselves in the nursery with our little merry imitators of men and manners. The Proprietor had, with the best intentions, devoted the Profits of the Evening to the relief of the poor suffering Irish, but there was not a sufficient audience to realise his wishes.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Beaux Stratagem, and Rosina, were performed here on Saturday night, to a crowded House. Mr. LISTON's Scrub kept the audience in a roar of laughter. And Miss M. TREE as Rosina, looked as if sang sweetly.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Two Gentlemen of Verona, who might have been supposed dead and buried, and who could very well be spared in the Stage-world, appeared here last night, with the same adjuncts of song and skew as attended their former career at this House. This Play is not highly attractive in itself, and without the assistance of Mr. BISHOP and Mr. FARLEY, we doubt whether Mr. SHAKSPEARE's name being attached to it, would have been sufficient to confer that popularity which for a time it has enjoyed. But the fair and tuneful representatives of Julia and Sylvia, Miss M. TREE and Miss HALLANDE, and that laugh-provoking Launce, Mr LISTON, with his docile dog, together with the trundled pictures of the Seasons, and Cleopatra's Galley, are in themselves a host, and, if there were nothing else to be heard or seen in the piece, we believe there would be no great regret on the part of that enlightened monster the Town. However, last night, the monster had very few of his heads at the service of The Two Gentlemen, for there were a smaller number of them than we have seen at this Theatre during the season.

---

HAY-MARKET.

"The Bill of Fare" by being a little reduced in its tempting articles, has not been rendered less palatable. After it, we were favored with The Beggars' Opera, in which there was to appear a novelty—"A YOUNG LADY," a pupil of Mr. D. CORRI's, who was to make "her first appearance on any stage" as Polly. Accordingly the announced debut took place, and as far as a single performance can establish a reputation, that has been done by the Young Lady in a distinguished and successful manner.

On her entre, as might be supposed, she was agitated by all the pretty alarms of her new situation---she could not for a little time utter a word, whilst timidity was fitting about her features and her person to the great disparagement of both. However, her dramatic papa Mr. TERRY, with his friendly squeezes and shakes by the hand, and the audience by their cheering applause, restored her scattered spirits, and we were presently delighted by the first efforts of a very charming voice, whose powers are extensive and perfectly under controul, and which possesses, we think, every requisite to fix this Young Lady, as a first-rate singer. She sung the airs of the character with great simplicity and sweetness; but, we imagine, under less agitation, she will be able to give them a deeper tone of feeling. To sing to the heart as well as the ear should be the endeavour of vocalists who execute sentimental music. To touch the chord of sensibility in our breasts, does more for a singer than the communication of the most perfect harmony and science, and the most extraordinary compass and execution. The fair debutante was frequently encored, but from her intense trepidation, she did not give "Cease your funning," with all the effect that might have been expected from her complete success in her other songs. This, we are certain, may be entirely attributed to her nerves, which were evidently agitated on commencing the above-named air, being, as it is, a sort of proof-song, of vocal ability. This young lady has a pleasing person, and acts with considerable propriety. She has, however, room for improvement in both branches of her line of performance, and it would, indeed, be astonishing were it not so. We shall be able to say more of her, as the audience accepted her as a candidate for favoritism in the most flattering manner.

Mr. TERRY acts Peachum in a very quiet style of satire, but we wish in the quarrel-scene with Lockett he would not fall into this style again so soon—his "Brother, brother, &c." was not in a tone to complete the effect of the previous well-wrought-up squabble. Mr. WILLIAMS proves himself in this scene an excellent actor. The absence of J. RUSSELL as Filch was felt. Mr. HAMMOND has not so much of the Newgate finish about him as the former.

Madame VESTRIS represented Macheath with her well known talent—"When the heart of a man," and "How happy could I be with either," were delightfully sung for a female Macheath—the latter song was encored. We, however, cannot but regret the want of a bold masculine voice in this part.

Katherine and Petruchio followed, and introduced to us on these boards, that distinguished ornament of his profession, Mr. CHARLES KEMBLE, whose lively and pointed personation of the Shrew-tamer, created the greatest entertainment. Mrs. JOHNSTON's Shrew is tolerably sharp and saucy, and did not injure the spirit of this amusing piece. The House was very well attended.

LYCEUM.—Mr. MATHEWS, last night, was brilliantly attended—Two nights more—and he is gone!

ADELPHI.—That ingenious Ventriloquist, Mr. ALEXANDRE, we are happy to find is nightly encouraged by overflowing houses.

VAUXHALL. These delightful Gardens, last night, presented their usual points of attraction. They are to open to-morrow, with a Grand Gala, in honor of the Battle of Waterloo.

HAY-MARKET.

The Beggars' Opera was repeated here, last night, to exhibit the new Polly again. The young lady, whose name we understand is GRANVILLE, went through her songs with rather better effect in some instances; but now that we may say her timidity is overcome in a great degree, we must attribute some slight defects in her upper notes to a natural cause, namely, their not being susceptible of the same sweetness and harmony of tone as her lower ones. In the latter there is a great resemblance to some of the tones of Madame Vestris, which are mellow and flowing. She sang 'Cease your funning' in a somewhat superior style to that of the previous evening—yet it was not very effective, for she has still much to learn from practice, in order to express fully the various beauties of this difficult song.

There cannot be a doubt that this lady is a great acquisition to this Theatre, and deserves every encouragement; but it will be the part of her friends and her instructor, not to conceal from her the faults which she has to overcome in the management of her upper notes. In her acting she exhibits considerable ease and grace; however, she must keep up her speaking voice a little more.

Madame VESTRIS exerted herself greatly, and met with her usual share of applause. A critic in one of yesterday's newspapers has stated, that she is falling off in her singing; If he had heard her, last night, his ears ought to be cut off if he did not admit that she never sung better. Certainly, this lady often appears as if she would benefit in her health, and, of course, in the firmness of her voice, by a little retirement from the arduous duties of her profession. After having for so long a period gone through the rakish progress of Don Giovanni, sea-breezes would be of infinite service to her, and thus by next winter we might hope to see her in florid health.—But we beg pardon—we forget ourselves—we are turning physicians, and robbing Doctor Somebody of a fee.

Mrs. JONES, who played Lucy, with her little ballad voice, and comfortable figure, is not highly calculated either to look or sing the character. Yet she gets through without offending in any great degree. Might it not be as well to shorten her part? We, really, could pardon her singing two or three songs less.

Mr. HAMMOND as Filch, with his black eye, shewed rather more enervishness than before, he may improve by further attention to

Mr. TERRY and Mr. WILLIAMS were really most excellent representatives of Peachum and Locket; they gave full point to all the satire set down for them.

We must not forget to name Mrs. PEARCE, who personates Mrs. Peachum to the life.

The whole representation of this amusing Opera is very creditable to the House: but the Orchestra.—Oh, the Orchestra! There was a pretty numerous and very genteel audience.

THE SUICIDE.—This Comedy, which is to be performed here this evening, is from the pen of the elder COLMAN, and was brought out at the Haymarket Theatre in the year 1778: it has not been acted for these last two years.

The author of the Biographia Dramatica truly observes that—“The author of this piece might be considered as one of the best judges of stage writing of any dramatist of his time. Although none of the characters can be spoken of as new, yet the business of the drama is conducted with so much judgment, that we cannot but esteem this very pleasing comedy as little inferior to the best of Mr. Colman’s productions. The character of Wingrave, an undertaker, seems borrowed from Sable, in Steel’s Funeral; and although he fell short of his ingenious precursor, Mr. Colman to a certain degree succeeded in producing mirth from a subject the most serious that can be contemplated. The quarrelling scene between the poet and the player, is taken from Joseph Andrews, and the duel from The Coxcomb of Beaumont and Fletcher.”

COVENT GARDEN.

Miss FOOTE, last night, had a splendid Benefit. The Othello of Mr. MACREADY, and the Iago of Mr. YOUNG, were a great source of attraction. Miss FOOTE acted Desdemona in a very charming and impressive manner. Her reply to the Moor’s gross accusatory question, was given with peculiar emphasis.

Miss M. TREE, who takes her BENEFIT this evening, is both from her private and professional character, one of the most deserving favorites of the Public. Her delightful style of singing, and her unobtrusive and sensible manner of acting, have gained her a host of admirers. We have heard that in the Green Room she is esteemed by every one.

HAY-MARKET.

THE Comedy of The Suicide was acted last night. It is upon the whole a piece that may be produced occasionally as a curiosity in its way, but it can never become a favorite. The character of Tobine absorbs the chief interest; yet, as it is exhibited through the lowest vices, it is a painful interest. The moral is bad—a man devoted to drinking, turbulence, and other di-graceful propensities, and who at length poisons himself as he believes, is represented as having principle! This is preposterous. Mr. C. KEMBLE, who personated Tobine, gave a most faithful picture of the dissolute tradesman. His drunken-scene in the third act, surpassed any representation of inebriety we ever saw on the Stage—it was so true a picture that the same effect was produced which arises from the disgusting sight of one who has really made a beast of himself. Of course this cannot be called entertainment—particularly by the ladies, who have no idea of judging critically on the merits of a scene of debauchery.

Mr. TERRY, as Fubby, gave the “first lesson” to his dissipated partner with point. Itanter, the player, by Mr. TAYLEURE, was not badly done, but his voice is unpleasant. The poet, Catchpenny, was very well acted by Mr. WILLIAMS; and between them the quarrel-scene was rendered laughable. We intreat, if this play is to be repeated, that Bounce and Squib be either better represented, or left out altogether.—Never was there such execrable acting seen on the London boards. Mr. W. WEST did his part in the afterpiece, The Bill of Fare, very well—but his Squib was most grossly over-acted. Mr. COATES, who played Dr. Bolus, seems a sensible actor, but a little infusion of humor would be an improvement. Mrs. CHATTERLEY is an agreeable actress—she personated Nancy very satisfactorily. An odd affair happened in the fourth, which is the last act. Wingrave announced in the bills to be performed by Mr. OXBERRY, never appeared! the worthy undertaker was missing! At the end of the Play there was some hissing—but it subsided until Mr. OXBERRY’s appearance as Stingo in The Bill of Fare, when loud disapprobation was expressed: on which Mr. Oxberry stepped forward, and thus addressed the audience with considerable embarrassment of manner.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

I cannot but be conscious of the cause of your present disapprobation. I have been forty years before the public, and never have been in the same situation. The play of The Suicide is not printed—it is in four acts—I was walking in the Park studying a part in which I am to seek your approbation on Saturday—I forgot that The Suicide was not in five acts—I arrived at the Theatre—the last act was on. Ladies and Gentlemen I must beg pardon—your approbation I have ever felt—I feel—I—I (Loud applause—Mr. Oxberry clapping his hand on his breast, &c.&c.) The House was well attended.

COVENT GARDEN. Miss M. TREE, had a bumper benefit, last night.

HAY-MARKET.

The Bill of Fare, The Beggars' Opera, with Katherine and Petruchio, were again performed here, last night, with much the same effect as before. We hope to see "the young lady," in some other vocal character than Polly, when the public will be better able to judge of her merits. However, in expressing this wish, we do not mean to intimate a desire to see Operas often performed at this House—on the contrary, we think the well-remembered character of the "Little Theatre" for being the arena of mirth, would not be happily united with the reputation of "The New Theatre," by making it a frequent scene of musical rivalry with The English Opera House. These two Theatres have a most distinct line to pursue—they are quite independent of each other, by situation, and by species of attraction provided the Haymarket keeps to its proper objects of entertainment. We conceive this Theatre is most valuable to the public as a place where a sterling play can be fully enjoyed from the audience being able to hear and see every thing passing on the Stage, which is a treat but seldom met with in any part of our Great Winter Theatres. As, therefore, it possesses what The English Opera does not, a free range of the Drama, it should be devoted almost exclusively to representing Comedy and Farce, whilst the other Summer Theatre should be left unopposed to its proper field of interest and humor, combined with music. By following this plan, each of these Theatres would be considered by the public as places of a different species of amusement, and the audiences of the one would become audiences of the other in the certainty of having an entertainment of a very distinct nature at each. There is nothing more desirable in a Manager than an eager ambition to gain over the public to a favorable opinion of his representations, but in the case of the two Theatres in question, their endeavours to attain superior distinction should be on their proper and separate ground.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Comedy of Errors, and Aladdin, were the pieces played here, last night. With respect to the former, we would at any time prefer reading the play to seeing it represented. The impossibility of giving through the eye an impression of the resemblances of the Antipholis's and of the Dromio's, renders the whole a very forced affair on the Stage.

Miss STEPHENS and Miss TREE as Adriana and Luciana, were very delightful.

In the melo-drama Miss FOOTE acted and looked the fortunate Aladdin very agreeably.

We have heard that the true cause of the abandonment of Drury Lane Theatre by the public, has been ascertained. It seems there was a most numerous and active company of performers who were determined to draw off all attention from Kean, Munden, Harley, Knight, &c. Their efforts were often but too successful—they frequently produced a feeling more touching than that caused by the tragic hero—they have frequently created an utter indifference to all the humor of the comic ones—they compelled attention to their exertions, and no one could avoid clapping their hands wherever they acted—in short this company was the most formidable that ever opposed a Manager, for it was impossible for him to cut-rival its performers, in their peculiar style of acting.—This Company was a most numerous and well appointed body—of FLEAS! who played every night at Drury before the Curtain! Whilst Kean was stabbing his Desdemona one of these dingy actors was often doing the same to some fair in the Boxes—and whilst Munden was making every one grin, one of the little humorists, seated on the clock of a silk stocking, was producing an equally comic effect, and whilst Harley and Knight were bustling and skipping about the Stage, equally active performers were on the boards in front, eager to make a hit!

ADELPHI.—Mr. ALEXANDRE was last night, attended by a very numerous company, who were astonished by his powers of Ventriloquism. He has, from this encouragement, extended his performances for a few nights longer.

LYCEUM.—Mr. MATHEWS could hardly find room for his visitors, yesterday evening. We see him closing his admirable entertainment with great regret—to-morrow night is his final one previous to his departure for America.

HAY-MARKET.

When a Lady is a candidate for the favor of the public, it is a great happiness to be able to record her success: that happiness is ours in announcing the debutante of last night, Mrs. W. CLIFFORD, from the Norwich Theatre, to have amply merited and obtained the decided approbation of a numerous and genteel audience, for a most excellent representation of Mrs. Haller, in The Stranger. Her person, which is well formed, is above the middle size; her features are pleasing and capable of much expression; her voice powerful, well regulated, and harmonious; and her pronunciation correct and distinct. She appears perfectly acquainted with the business of the Stage, which she treads with much grace: Her emphases were in general well placed, and her whole delivery and action very appropriate. Mr. C. KEMBLE played The Stranger in an impressive style, and towards the conclusion the spontaneous and silent applause of tears glistened in many an eye, forming the best proof of the intense feeling created by the two principal characters. We regret that Steinfort had not more animation bestowed on him by Mr. YOUNGER. The Solomon of Mr. WILLIAMS, and Peter of Mr. OXBERRY, were extremely well done. Mr. BAKER was out of his element as Francis. He played it without the least point. Let him refer for a model to Mr. Farley, who makes Francis as eccentric in his way as his master. We imagine the part has been given to Mr. Baker from there not being any other person of this establishment at all capable of filling it. Mr. COATES was very respectable as the old man Tobias. Miss BOYCE acted the Countess Wintersen, with much propriety. Mrs. BAKER was almost too flippant a Charlotte.

Throughout the performance, and at the conclusion of the piece, the greatest applause was bestowed on Mrs. Clifford and Mr. Kemble—and the announcement of its repetition for this evening, was given amidst acclamations.

COVENT GARDEN.

Last night, the Comedy of The Rivals was performed, and was followed by The Padlock. In the former piece Mr. ABBOTT, played Faulkland instead of Mr. YOUNG, a change that was greatly felt. Miss FOOTE looked very languishing as the fair Lydia, and Mrs. DAVISON acted Julia with her usual propriety. The House was crowded—it was a ticket-night.

MR. MATHEWS'S LAST NIGHT.

After a brilliant career, Mr. Mathews this evening gives his last "AT HOME" previous to his trip to the other side of the Atlantic. Many thousands have laughed with him, and many thousands will regret they had not paid him a visit before his departure. We only wish he would appear one more evening, in some capacious Theatre, and summon his friends around him to bid him good bye in a more striking manner.

VAUXHALL.—Last night, the Gardens were most brilliantly attended: and the Music, Rope-dancing, and Fire-works, created great delight and astonishment.

COVENT GARDEN.

Mr. MACREADY acted Rob Roy on Saturday evening. We have before stated our opinion of his manner of performing this character. He is by far too graceful for the highland free-booter. Yet he gives much vividness to many parts, and on the whole is effective. The swinging of his right leg as he sits on the table in the tolbooth, had a too ludicrous appearance from its long-continued pendulum motion, whilst the left leg looked either as if it did not belong to him, or as if it were made of cork. The Pit was full, but the other parts of the house were poorly attended.

On Wednesday, for the Benefit of Mr. BRANDON, Box-book and House-keeper, the Play of The Iron Chest, a Grand Concert, with other Entertainments. On Thursday, for the Benefit of Mr. TAYLOR, the Opera of Montrose, with the Musical Farce of The Barber of Seville. On Friday, for the Benefit of Mr. ABBOTT, The Beggars' Opera, with (first time at this Theatre) a Farce, in one act, called Mr. H. to which will be added Aladdin. On Saturday, for the Benefit of Mr. WARE, the Opera of The Antiquary. Being the last Night of the Company's performing this Season.

HAY-MARKET.

Mrs. CLIFFORD repeated the part of Mrs. Haller, on Saturday night, with equally good effect. Miss GRANVILLE's Polly in The Beggars' Opera, met the same degree of applause as on the former evenings. The House was not crowded—it is well ventilated.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

The ingenious Mons. ALEXANDRE, this Evening exhibits The Rogueries of Nicholas, &c.

ENGLISH OPERA HOUSE.

Mr. MATHEWS, on Saturday evening, had a crowded and laughing audience, and thus closed the most prosperous season, (one excepted, that of The Trip to Paris) he has experienced during the five years of his career in his singular and mirth-creating entertainment. He now proceeds to America, where we most sincerely wish him perfect health, and a shower of dollars; but, particularly, we wish him—soon "AT HOME" again.

We subjoin his Farewell Address, which he delivered at the conclusion of "THE STORIES."

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

"My Task of the Evening being finished, it now only remains for me to bid you farewell. This is the last time for many months to come that I shall have the honor and pleasure of appearing before you. I would fain make you merry at parting, but I feel it impossible to leave such kind friends, even for a time, without a sensation here that prohibits an attempt at a mirthful leave-taking. That I may not therefore throw the same cloud over you which at this moment overshadows me, I will merely intreat that you will not forget me in my absence, and believe that though the Atlantic must part us, it is utterly impossible that I can ever forget how deeply I am indebted to your flattering and unwearied patronage. I trust to be enabled to bring back a new budget for your amusement, and all my powers of observation shall be roused to their utmost to collect such materials in my travels as shall prove that I have not absented myself from your smiles in vain."

The Summer Season of the English Opera, does not commence until Monday next, the 1st of July.—The House is to be cleaned and embellished. The company, (a list of which we detailed a fortnight since) is very strong; but we are sorry to learn that Mr. HARLEY is going into the country. The proprietor has engaged that most extraordinary little creature CLARA FISHER, who is to play a certain number of characters: the "Actress of All Work," is to be, we understand, her opening part, and Crack in The Turnpike Gate, both of which she performed at this Theatre with a humor, judgment, and effect, which would hardly be credited to have been elicited from a child scarcely seven years of age.

Mr. FEARMAN the singer, we regret to hear, is seriously ill.

We hear that the large Saloon, (which has annually been decorated as a waiting room to the second price) is not to be opened this Season. This part of the Theatre having been built many years before the English Opera House was established, requires a thorough repair, which will occupy some months. The proprietor has fitted up the Coffee-room, the original Saloon, in a very elegant and novel manner.

The House opens with a new Operatic Drama, from the pen of Mr. BEAZLEY. The Music by Mr. WATSON, of the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden.

HAY-MARKET.

THE Mountaineers was the first piece, last night—why it was acted here we know not, unless it is supposed that an audience can be pleased with a play wherein hardly more than the principal character is well performed. We will admit, that at this Theatre, such a Drama as The Mountaineers may be represented, in order to introduce in its chief some new candidate for metropolitan approbation, but to perform it merely on the ground of that character being filled by a well-known and highly respectable actor, is an act of management to which we cannot entirely assent.

Our opinion we believe is by no means a solitary one, that this Theatre should confine itself to the mirthful branches of the Drama, and not attempt, with a company that cannot be expected to equal the members of our winter green-rooms, to act plays beyond its strength. Mr. CHARLES KEMBLE is a man of superior talent and taste, and on every character he attempts he impresses some portion of merit. Thus, as Octavian, last night, he fully maintained the general features of the part, and in one or two instances rose to the highest pitch of excellence. Yet we cannot say we would ardently desire to see him in this character again. He was very affecting in the interview with Floranthe, and an unfortunate proof of his powers in this scene occurred, just at that part where he bursts into an hysteric laugh of joy at learning that Floranthe lives for him; a lady in the Boxes at this moment went into a strong hysterical fit, and was obliged to be taken out.

Excepting Mr. KEMBLE, Mrs. CHATTERLEY who represented Floranthe, and Mr. OXBERRY as Lope Tocho, we really cannot compliment any lady or gentleman in any high degree, for their execution of the parts confided to them. Miss BOYCE, certainly, was out of her proper place as Zorayda. Mr. W. WEST did Sadi very ineffectively; but considering that he is a young performer, much of his failure may be attributed to inexperience.

After this Play, a "new musical Farce in 2 acts," entitled "Love Letters," was produced. It is a translation from the French we imagine, and, except the music, which is very pleasing, is not good for much—it will not take any hold of the public. The scene is laid in Paris, and the Plot is full of frivolities. Belcour, (Mr. Leoni Lee) a young officer, has privately married Emily, (Mrs. Garrick) and being obliged to leave Paris for a short time, the united pair agree that his letters should come addressed to Lisette, (Madame Vestris) Emily's attendant. Lisette it appears, has two lovers, one named La Fleur, (Mr. Johnson) and the other Tripponier, (Mr. Oxberry) The former is the favored one; and the latter, a Parisian blacklegs, in order to ruin his opponent in his mistress's affection, resorts to various tricks of stealing and re-writing letters, which, however, ultimately fail of effect, for Lisette marries La Fleur. But marriage does not put an end to La Fleur's difficulties, for a letter from Belcour to Emily, addressed to Lisette by way of concealment, raises a jealous fit in the bridegroom's breast which is at length removed, as it was created, without much ingenuity, and the piece terminates with the happiness of all except Mr. Tripponier. Mr. TAYLEURE has a short but very stupid part, by name Robert, a non-descript sort of character, introduced merely to mangle a letter in his shoe, and manufacture one in his own style, full of the names of songs, which, although unintelligible, raises in La Fleur the same feelings that a sensible and warm epistle from a lover to his wife might have done.

The Songs are very pleasing. One sung by Madame Vestris, who was the life and soul of the piece, and a spirited and amusing duet between her and Mr. Johnson, were deservedly encored. The dialogue is appropriate, but not very smart. The announcement for this evening, was not received with enthusiasm. There was a genteel and pretty numerous audience.

COVENT GARDEN.

LAST night, Cymbeline, was acted to a tolerably numerous audience. Mr. MACREADY represents Leonatus in a very masterly manner. Mr. YOUNG's Iachimo contains much able declamation, but he too often chills the flame he has powerfully raised. Of Miss M. TREE's Imogen it is impossible to speak but in terms of praise.

ADELPHI.—Mr. ALEXANDRE was numerously and elegantly attended yesterday evening—We believe to-night, Thursday, and Saturday, are his last nights of performance.

ERRATA.

THE "JOHN BULL," AND MR. BRAHAM.

THAT base, unprincipled paper, called, "John Bull" still continues to exist on its manufactured libels and "humbugs." One of them, they last week got inserted in the daily papers, relative to an Entertainment given by Mr. BRAHAM, in the following terms.—

" On Monday evening Mr. BRAHAM entertained a distinguished party of elegant and fashionable friends, at his Villa at Finchley.—Those who ever felt, and those who never felt the power of song, should have found a place at the festive board. Mr. Braham, in fine voice, and full flow of animation, now soared with the lark—now perched with the nightingale. MADAME CATALANI'S full stream flowed through flowery meads, or dashed down the torrent. In the most exquisite duets, the two choice spirits of the age " ranged the fields together," till the souls of their enraptured and inspired auditors in dreams of pleasure melted away. The Scottish songstress, with her " Highland Laddie" carried them o'er brae and burn on the wings of the zephyr, and left them nothing to desire. Wit, mirth, and melody opened the scene, and harmony closed it with the parting day."

On Sunday last the Editors innocently transfer this article into their own columns, as if it were written by Mr. Braham, and next comment on it in a style that they conceived might prove acceptable to the depraved taste of many of the readers of their Paper. Mr. Braham has sent the following reply to the Press.

" SIR,

East End, Finchley.

Permit me through the medium of your Paper, to offer a few observations relating to some malicious and undeserved attacks upon me on various occasions in the John Bull Newspaper. Nearly a twelvemonth has now elapsed since the Editors of that Paper circulated and published a report, that a man of the name of Heywood was at my house in Tavistock-square, when his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex honored me with his presence. I solemnly declare that I never knew of the existence of that unfortunate man, but through the medium of the public press; yet the Editors had the cruelty to call him my especial friend. What could have been their motive for publishing a statement so base, false, and malicious, is best known to themselves. I was in hopes that common justice would have prompted them to contradict the libel, and make the amende honorable. They have done no such thing; on the contrary they have availed themselves of every opportunity to assail me with ill-nature and obloquy. A few days since an inflated and ridiculous paragraph, which appeared in some of the morning papers, professing to give an account of a dinner party I had the honor of giving to some distinguished individuals, called forth again the spleen of the John Bull Newspaper. Were I capable of writing or countenancing such an absurd account as that I allude to, I should indeed conceive myself to be justly an object of ridicule. I have not the faintest idea who could have sent the paragraph in question. I am not such a vain fool as to think my giving a party at Finchley, or elsewhere, ought to be published and bruited forth. When I read the account in the Newspapers I was extremely mortified, as my friends can testify. I never in my life wrote or sent a puff to any Newspaper. If the John Bull can, by abusing me, enhance the sale of their paper, they are welcome; I shall bear it with patience. But they must allow me, with all due humility, to say, that they have wronged me very much, that their strictures were too severe and unmerited; I owe them no ill-will. It requires great talent and greater ill-nature to enter the lists with such consummate writers: I possess neither the one nor the other. I have not the vanity they ascribe to me: the only vanity I acknowledge is to continue to deserve the approbation of the public to my professional exertions. To the Press I owe much: I shall always feel grateful. To the generosity and right feeling which have ever distinguished a British Public, I leave the cause of your obliged and humble servant,

JOHN BRAHAM."

HAY-MARKET.

The School for Scandal, and Love Letters, were performed, last night. With respect to the former piece, the recent admirable manner in which it was performed at Covent Garden Theatre, makes its representation here, except in two or three characters, appear rather insipid. The new afterpiece went off with pretty similar effect to that on the first night.

HAY-MARKET.

EAST night, Mrs. Inchbald's Comedy of Every One has His Fault, was very successfully performed here. This Piece has many good points, with one or two blemishes, which arise from the introduction and manner of conducting the Irwin story. This style of Comedy which aims at alternately checking the laugh by raising the sigh and tear, and obliterating the serious feeling by restoring the mirthful one, may be thought, as it resembles our changeful climate, to be a truly English style; but we disclaim it as being the natural result of our taste, and ascribe it entirely to the success which attended the introduction of some of the German Dramas. Pieces of this description should be termed Serio-Comic, and not Comedy; for the genuine Comic Muse has not a tear but for mirth, not a smile but for humor, nor a thought but for wit.

If Mr. Sheridan had introduced into his School for Scandal some episodical miseries—such as a starving family—a desperate husband, and father forcing relief with a pistol—an agonised wife—and a child full of heart-affecting sensibility, what would have been the reputation of his play? His wit, humor, and satire, would have been obscured, and instead of our laughing at the follies of mankind, and being fixed on the minute shades of difference in human character, pleasantly displayed, we should have been obliged every now and then to abandon the exercise of the mind, in order to open the common sluices of feeling, and exercise nothing but our pocket-handkerchiefs. However, we do not say that Plays containing melancholy scenes of life, are without their use. They certainly may stimulate and improve the best impulses of our nature—yet we would have them not assume the title, as they have not all the attributes of comedy.

MR. TERRY's performance of Harmony was peculiarly excellent. His quiet manner of persuading—his quickness and earnestness in seizing his advantage when he could render the universal love of commendation subservient to his harmonic purposes, were very true to the character, and highly entertaining. Sir Robert Ramble was most pleasantly acted by Mr. C. KEMBLE. MR. OXBERRY's Solus was not amiss—but he seemed to have a cold which affected his voice. MR. BAKER was a genteel Placid; but somehow he looks unlike a man who could suffer himself to be so abominably hen-peck'd. MR. FAULKNER made a very tolerable Irwin. MRS. CHATTERLEY looked and acted in a very interesting manner as Lady Eleanor Irwin. MRS. TAYLEURE acted Mrs. Placid, and seemed quite at home in the character. Yet we are not aware that we can say, "poor Mr. Tayleure!" Miss BOYCE as Miss Wooburn, and MRS. PEARCE as Miss Spinster, did their short parts very appropriately. We must not forget to commend little Miss CARR for her representation of Edward;—she acted it extremely well.

The Bill of Fare, and Love Letters, filled up the rest of the evening's entertainments. The House was genteely and pretty fully attended.

COVENT GARDEN.

We are glad to say Mr. BRANDON's Benefit, last night, was fully and fashionably attended. Mr. YOUNG acted Sir Edward Mortimer in The Iron Chest with great effect. After the Play, Mr. Brandon's two daughters sang several songs in a very pleasing manner. They seemed under considerable alarm on coming forward. Mr. Watson is their musical instructor, and they certainly do him great credit.

The Libertine concluded the night's amusement, in which Miss STEPHENS as Zerlina sung in her usual delightful manner.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.—The rent of £10,200 has not only been paid by Mr. ELLISTON, but he has also paid an additional £1100 on account of the extra-nights the Theatre has been open. We rejoice to hear this, although convinced that the money has not been entirely obtained from the public.

ADELPHI THEATRE.—Mr. ALEXANDRE besides being a very worthy gentleman, is certainly the most surprising Ventriloquist we ever heard. He therefore, merits the encouragement he is receiving. He performs to-night. This Theatre is very excellently ventilated.

DUBLIN THEATRE.—Miss WILSON and Mr. HORN are performing here. The Opera of Dirce which failed at Drury Lane, has completely succeeded at this Theatre, which the Irish attribute to their superior musical taste.

BATH THEATRE.—Mr. KEAN on Saturday last completed his limited number of appearances in six of his principal characters. The Bath critics speak in warm terms of praise of his acting throughout.

HAY-MARKET.

LAST night there was variety enough. No less than four different pieces were performed, viz. The Bill of Fare, The Wedding Day, Love Letters, and Katherine and Petruchio. In The Wedding Day, Mr. TERRY acted Sir Adam Contest, in an excellent manner, and received great applause. And Mrs. CHATTERLEY as Lady Contest, performed with much spirit, and had her share of the approbation, The Love Letters continue to be stolen, snatched, mangled, and converted into nonsense, as before, and terminate without much affection on the part of the audience. The comic duet of "When a little Farm we keep," excited some contention about its repetition, which terminated with its being sung again. Mrs. JOHNSTONE and Mr. C. KEMBLE as Katherine and Petruchio, gave high satisfaction, and sent away a genteel, but not very numerous audience, in high good humor.

COVENT GARDEN.

MONTROSE with "all the Auxiliaries" and The Barber of Seville, were acted last night for Mr. Charles Taylor's Benefit.

The House closes to-morrow evening, on which occasion Mr. WARE, the scientific Leader of the Band, takes his Benefit. We hardly know any one who so skillfully "rubbeth the hair of the horse to the bowels of the cat."

MISS B——.

There is a Police Report which has appeared in different Newspapers, and which relates to a "Mrs. B—," and her daughter "Miss B—," the sister of a distinguished Actress, as the Reporter states. We should not have felt it within our province to have taken any notice of this article, were it not for the intimation, the unnecessary and cruel intimation of the connexion of the unfortunate parties with "a distinguished actress," or it happens there are several Miss B's on the Stage, all of whom are involved in the suspicion of being that "Miss B." who has a mother capable of the worst of actions—a mother who is base enough to dispose of a daughter's virtue! The respective Miss B's. who are actresses, and who are not involved in this story, must of course, if the name of the real party is not disclosed, come forward to relieve themselves from the imputation which may be cast on their family. We sincerely pity the lady who cannot thus come forward: but let her recollect that if virtuous herself, she has at least, to all appearance, the comfort of possessing a sister, if not a mother, of congenial feeling—and that the public is too generous to cast the slightest obloquy on her.

Vauxhall.—This Fairy-Land is open to-night to all who would be enchanted. Such as may keep within the illuminated paths may be sure of escaping the powers of darkness. The guardians of the revelry have so exerted their art, that the slices of ham, &c. that were in former times invisible, have become solid and tangible:—and the magical rapacity of other days is now superceded by a very satisfactory transmutation of coin into chickens, &c. &c.

COVENT GARDEN.

The Beggars' Opera, with Husbands and Wives, and John of Paris, were performed, last night, for the Benefit of Mr. ABBOTT, Mr. DURSET, &c.—Madame VESTRIS lent her assistance by representing Macheath on the occasion.

This Theatre closes a successful season this evening. It is to be presumed the Managers will not imitate the conduct of Mr. ELLSTON, in abstaining from addressing to the Public a few words of thanks and leave-taking.

HAY-MARKET.

The Bill of Fare, The Stranger, and Love Letters, were the performances, last night. Mrs. W. CLIFFORD, made her third appearance as Mrs. Haller, in the second piece. She gave additional proofs of her talents for the Stage, and we consider her to be sufficiently in favour with a London audience, to attempt some other character. Both Mr. C. KEMBLE as the Stranger, and this lady, interested the company in a high degree; but, from several of the inferior parts not being ably supported, the general effect was not in unison with the particular feeling created by the two principal characters, and so the play created little enthusiasm.

There is nothing more important, not only to a Drama, but to the leading persons in it, than that those who represent even the most trivial characters, should execute their part with ability. If a man has merely to come in with a message and be seen no more, were he to do it incorrectly, it would cast a slur upon the whole scene, and assist to destroy that illusion which the higher characters are striving to maintain.

In Love Letters, Madame VESTRIS as Lizette, received the usual if not a greater share of applause than on former occasions. Mr. JOHNSON rather over-acts La Fleur; but vivacity does not appear his forte any more than it is that of Mr. COOPER of Drury Lane, whom he somewhat resembles in voice and manner.

Music.—A citizen of Courland, of the name of Hanson, has invented an instrument which he calls Olympicon, and which to a rare beauty joins the advantage of compassing all the tones of the violin base, violoncello, and the high contre (haute contre)—All who play the piano can perform on the Olympicon, and with it a single person may execute a concert,

It has been proved by experiment that if the Scotch Bagpipes, were to be played occasionally for a few days in any place infested with Rats, they would immediately quit the premises and never return. We know what some of the O. P. gentlemen would suggest from learning this discovery:

THE "JOHN BULL" AND MR. BRAHAM.

The Public has lately seen from Mr. BRAHAM'S Letter contained in our Wednesday's number, in how unprincipled a manner the John Bull Newspaper has behaved towards him. If the Editor of that debased Paper does not to-morrow do him ample justice by acknowledging the falsehood of the statement relating to Hayward the Robber having been of Mr. Braham's acquaintance, and a visitor at his house, it must be considered by every one that there exists on the part of its proprietors a determination to continue to attack and defame any one in private life, in order to form an attractive paragraph. Let them repent, and abandon a method of living that surpasses in atrocity the highwayman's calling.

Mr. KEAN is at Birmingham, where he has been playing his principal characters. He was to act Lear this evening for his benefit, being the last night of his appearance at that Theatre. Mrs. BUNN and Miss DANCE have been acting with him. Mr. COOPER is engaged at this Theatre.
